"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. There is nothing so good for the youthful blood" as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Geo. Bell, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, and, in conscience, say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the case for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

THE CROP OUTLOOK.

The Agricultural Bureau's Weekly Crop Bulletin.

The weekly weather crop bulletin issued by the Signal Office says:

The weather has been favorable for all growing crops throughout the central and northwest, except in Dakota, where drought is reported as injurious to wheat, oats, barley, and corn, its reported fine and growing rapidly in this State and generally throughout the east half. From Minnesota reports show that the crops are improved, and in the Red River and the Minnesota Valley recently injured from Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Kentucky, and Arkansas show the conditions of the week especially favorable for corn, which has made rapid growth. Haymaking is in progress as far north as the fortieth parallel, and the yield is large. Winter wheat is in progress in Tennessee, and the damage to wheat from growing rains has been overestimated. Reports from the tobacco regions of Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina show that the crop is doing well. Favorable rains occurred in Texas, and the cotton crop is in good condition. Advices from California report that the weather has improved for seedable weather and well distributed rains. In Mississippi the crop was not quite so forward as in Southern Louisiana, the rice and sugar crops are improving, and the cotton crop is in good condition, and will further improve the crop. In the Middle Atlantic States, New England and Ohio some injury resulted from continuous rains and the absence of sunshine, although the crop prospects continue good in these sections. Reports from Southern New England show all crops including tobacco, improved and in fine condition.

NORTHERN PACIFIC PLANS.

A Combination with the Grand Trunk to Be Undertaken.

T. F. Oakes President of the Northern Pacific, in an interview in St. Paul, denies emphatically that his company proposes to withdraw from its Canadian relations, says they are building rapidly through Montana, and admits that negotiations are under way looking to the purchase of the Northwest Central Railway. The great inducement to buy the Wisconsin Central, he added, was because his road would thereby be able to affiliate with the Grand Trunk and thus secure a through route to the Atlantic. The Northwest Central Road will be completed through Manitoba to Edmonton, and then extended to the Pacific coast over what is known as the "Mackenzie route," terminating at Skeena Bay.

FOLGHY WITH THE POLICE.

William O'Brien's Arrest at Cork Followed by a Riot.

The government's proclamation forbidding the holding of a Nationalist meeting at Cork, Ireland, was disregarded, scattered meetings being held at several places in that city and vicinity. The result was that William O'Brien, member of Parliament, and other speakers were arrested. After the arrest of Mr. O'Brien the crowd stoned the police, who in turn charged upon the people with drawn batons. Several persons were injured, including Patrick O'Brien, a member of Parliament, who shook hands with William O'Brien after the latter was arrested.

FITTING END FOR A BRUTE.

After Beating His Family He Throws Himself Beneath a Railroad Train.

At Baltimore Jacob Brommell, 70 years old, who had been drinking heavily, returned to his home and made a savage attack on his wife and nine children, all of whom were brutally beaten. Brommell was finally ejected and went to the tank of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. When a train appeared he deliberately threw himself in front of the locomotive and was cut to pieces.

FIRE CAUSED BY LIGHTNING.

Heavy Loss at Worcester Caused by the Destruction of a Warehouse.

At Worcester, Mass., during a heavy shower, the storehouse of the Paul Whitin Manufacturing Company at Rockdale, North Bridge, was struck by lightning and set on fire. The storehouse contained more than $40,000 worth of goods, and the fire burned for three hours, causing a heavy loss, which is covered by insurance.

ENCOURAGING PROSPECTS.

The Crop Outlook Favorable and Trade Active.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

It has been a week of considerable excitement in speculative circles and trade has ruled somewhat active, but general change in conditions, as all depends in a very measure at the season upon crop prospects, it is most encouraging to find that some of the most critical sections have been favored with showers and warmth, so that some revival to cotton and grain from frequent rains has been lost ground. In the Northwest the crop outlook is particularly cheering, great improvement in the prospect having taken place, and the crop is approaching maturity. With crops of unusual magnitude, highly probable, and with the general volume of business so maintained that the increase of the first half of last year, and in the clearing-house returns, the prospect is bright for a good fall trade. Reports from Chicago, Milwaukee and Omaha report fair activity. At Milwaukee improvement is seen, with increased activity, and the leading trade, Pittsburg the iron and other trades continue prosperous, and there is more life at Cleveland than for a month past, and at Detroit there is a visible improvement. The money markets continue amply supplied, in the iron industry there is a stronger feeling at all points, with increased production and better prices, and the cotton goods industry continues very active, and natural after the heavy exports of gold. There is nowhere observable any actual stringency, nor is speculation noticeably influential. The business failures number 215, as compared with 220 the week previous. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 179.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Those Who Have Been Successful in Their Aspirations.

The President has appointed Frederick Douglass to be Minister Resident and Consul General to Hayti. Secretary Windom has appointed Capt. William M. Meredith, of Chicago, to be Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Other appointments are as follows:

Ivins, District of Perth Amboy, New Jersey; Thomas Pennypacker, for the district of Washington, N. C.; Philip M. Hildebrand, to be Surveyor of Customs for the district of Indianapolis.

THE LAST RITES.

Simple Ceremonies at the Burial of Mrs. Hayes.

The body of Mrs. R. B. Hayes, the late wife of the ex-President, was buried in Oakwood Cemetery, at Fremont, Ohio. All business in Fremont was suspended, and during the funeral services at Spiegel Grove the grounds of the house were crowded with the friends and neighbors of Mr. Hayes. Fully six thousand people were present. Nearly a thousand people in wheeled vehicles in the city was pressed into service in carrying the throngs. The burial services were simple and impressive, opening with the reading of Scriptures by the Rev. J. M. Mills, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, to which Mrs. Hayes belonged. A quartette choir then sang the hymn, "Nearer Jesus to Thee With," after which the Rev. Dr. James W. Bashford, President of Ohio Wesleyan University, offered prayer. The choir then sang the hymn "When Peace, Like a River, Attendeth My Way," after which L. D. McCabe, who had known the dead from childhood, spoke a brief eulogy.

ITS RECORDS GONE.

Camp 20 of the Clan-na-Gael Suddenly Disbands.

Camp 20 of the Clan-na-Gael, at Chicago, has been disbanded. This camp is the one to which Dr. Cronin belonged, and which, it is thought, contained election of all of his brutal murderers. The story is that it was Edward Spellman, acting in his capacity of district officer of Illinois and Michigan, who disbanded it. When this information came upon the State's Attorney and the investigating committee it was a complete surprise. They were interested in preserving the camp intact for the present, then purpose being to obtain possession of all its records. The disbanding of the camp means the destruction of the records and the further thwarting of the authorities in their endeavor to investigate the secret doings of the notorious club. The State's Attorney has now a strong suspicion that Spellman disbanded the camp for the sole purpose of having its records destroyed.

PROTEST FROM THE CLAN-NA-GAEL.

A Manifesto Issued Relating to Dr. Cronin's Death.

The Executive Committee of the Clan-na-Gael have issued a manifesto to the public in which they say that the organization should not be held responsible for Dr. Cronin's death. In the course of the manifesto they say:

While we hold that a certain amount of privacy is justifiable and even necessary in conducting the proceedings of a secret society like the Clan-na-Gael we distinctly and emphatically protest that it was never intended that any order, or authority, any one to commit any act forbidden by the laws of the United States, or even those of any State, or to commit any crime whatsoever, shall be entitled to shelter under cover of party, or questioned in the courts of the

WENT THROUGH A BRIDGE.

A Train Wrecked and Two Persons Fatally Hurt.

A terrible storm which swept over Southern Ohio was the cause of a terrible accident which occurred just south of Batavia, where the water undermined the foundations of a thirty-foot bridge. The south-bound mail train on the Ohio and Northwestern Road ran into it, and the whole train, consisting of three coaches, the mail coach, and the engine went into the water. Col. Sam Hunt, receiver of the road, and W. O. Rain, the conductor, were both probably fatally hurt.

TAKE A RECEIPT.

Whenever a payment is made on subscription in person or produce, we always give a receipt, or prepaid to call at the office and get a receipt for the same, so that proper credit may be given on the books. Unless this is done, mistakes any misunderstandings are almost sure to follow. Please remember it.

The cotton mills in Fall River have been declaring large dividends, and the owners may perhaps be excused for attributing their prosperity to a republican success. But how about their employes, whose wages have not been raised, though they are paying half as much again as they were for the necessaries of life? To whom shall they attribute their condition? The republican party promised that their wages should be raised.—Free Press.

The Detroit Tribune, a rampant republican paper, speaking of the "gin. there Elf" members of the legislature, compliments Representative Wachtel as follows: "P. H. Wachtel, a slender gentlemen of rather nervous organization, is a business man of Petoskey. He is a democrat but that has made no difference with a passage of his bills through a republican legislature. He has been very successful. Perhaps the most important bill that he has urged and passed is the one amending the fish laws."

Tariff and Wages.

Keep this fact in mind. Last fall the people and the workingmen all over the land were told on the stump and in the press, and on the envelopes even in which they received their weekly or monthly wages, that in order to maintain the standard of wages, at the point satisfactory to themselves—they must vote the democratic "free trade" party down and out and put the republican party in full charge of the government. And also remember that the democratic party was voted out, and the republicans came into absolute control, and that instead of better wages there has been a very general reduction everywhere, and especially in all those industries where the tariff gives the highest degree of "protection." The situation must soon be realized, even by the dullest minds, and the same sort of deception cannot be so effectually practiced again.—Springfield State Register.

Browne's Theater Company.

Jas. H. Brown's Theater Co. will produce Leonard Grover's "Mixed Pickles." The company comprises ten people and are well spoken of by the press. Following is from the Manistique Pioneer: "As was expected Browne's Theater Company played to a full house last evening. 'Romany Rye' was new here and that troupe played it well—as near perfection as it was possible with the limited stage accommodations at their command. Mr. Browne fully sustained his previous high reputation as an actor, and was well supported by the entire company. Gavin's songs were new and won great applause. They give tonight 'The Private Secretary.' Of course every body will go, as they always do when this troupe is at the Star Opera House. To-morrow night will conclude their engagement here, perhaps for the season. This company have made many warm friends in Manistique, and wherever they appear a good audience awaits them."

At the Lewis Grand opera house on Friday evening, July 12th. Admission 25 and 35 cents; children 15 cents. Seats at Charlevoix Cigar Mfg. Co.'s store.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it lustre and vigor, that adds greatly to its charms. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schnitzler, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mahlon Harly, Delaware, Ill.

School closed at Advance June 28. The pupils acquitted themselves with much credit. A very entertaining and profitable address was delivered by P. B. Newton. The pupils showed their love and esteem for Miss Lewis their teacher, by presenting her with two beautifully bound volumes of poems.—Bryant and Whittier.

In the last Petoskey Democrat, Will E. Hampton, late assistant postmaster at Harbor Springs, gives L. A. Clark of the Harbor Springs Republican a severe scouring. Clark has been criticising the "Hamptons family" generally, and the administration of the Harbor-Springs postoffice in particular, and W. E. Hampton takes it upon himself to defend. What he charges by intimation and insinuation, if true, (and we have heard some of them before) ought to have prompted Mr. Clark to more discretion in his utterances.

The Belvedere house gave the opening dinner of the season on July 4th. The style and manner in which it was served indicates a master hand in the management of the cooking, and in the service of the waiters. The prospects of the house are for a still larger business than last year. Mr. and Mrs. Handelun of Kalamazoo have the management of the house this year, and Bryant Weed will continue as clerk.

OUR GLORIOUS FOURTH.

A Perfect Day, a Comfortable Crowd and a Satisfactory Program.

There could not be a more satisfactory combination of weather for a celebration than we had last week. The rain on Wednesday had all the dust most effectually, and on Thursday the air was cool and pleasant, with never a drop of rain, and nothing in the weather to prevent a faithful carrying out of the program.

The procession formed in front of the Fountain City House, and headed by the Charlevoix cornet band, marched to the vacant lot west of S. M. Seal's residence, where a speaker's platform and seats for the listeners had been prepared.

The reading of the declaration of independence by F. W. Mayne and the oration by A. D. Cruickshank were interspersed with music by the band, and the whole was very satisfactory.

In his address Mr. Cruickshank compared the celebration, the country, and the people of one hundred years ago with those of to-day, showing particularly the advantage of the colonies then and the nation now among the nations of the earth, and in the matter of education and business methods suggested lines of thought for each listener to make his own comparisons of the possibilities of the next century, or even of the next generation.

Following the exercises at the stand the audience adjourned for dinner. After dinner came the Northwestern Star combination with all their complimentary "Proof" Grand Campbell's performance on the tight rope, which was well done, and without any accident,—a surprise to many when they knew who "Prof. Campbell" was.

During the afternoon games and races were held and prizes awarded as follows:

In the foot race Vic McGibeny took first prize and John F. Robinson, of Petoskey, second prize.

Lee Beardslee won first prize in the bicycle race, Fred Wood took second and Warren Beardslee third prize.

First prize in the boat race was taken by Sam Hinton and second prize by Napoleon Vezina.

Parker McIntire of Norwood, took the prize in the horse race with his fast horse.

The base ball game at 4.30 resulted in a victory for Petoskey, they winning the game a score of 21 to 14.

There was music and dancing at Bartholomew's opera hall all the afternoon and evening.

There was a small display of fire works at the foot of Clinton street in the evening, after which the McGibeny family held the attention of a packed house at Lewis Grand until eleven o'clock.

Charlevoix people need no description of the ability of McGibeny family concert. They are masters in this profession, the little folks show being a versatile and a remarkable musical talent. Every performance of the little ones was encored, the "Kinder Songs" and "Turn Verein Drill," eliciting especial praise.

After the concert, the Charlevoix cornet band cleared the floor for a dance, which continued until a late hour.

The day was not quite hot enough to please the numerous proprietors of ice cream and lemonade stands, but what they lost in possible cash the balance of the people gained for their stomach sake.

Although the work of making arrangements was begun late, it has demonstrated that when Charlevoix determines to celebrate, she "gets there" with both feet, and it is a success,—in attendance as well as exercises.

Fifth Anniversary.

On Tuesday evening, July 9th, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Smith celebrated the fifth anniversary of their marriage. A large number of guests were present, and as the evening was bright and warm the lawn was delightful and numerous pleasant rooms. The Charlevoix cornet band was present to enliven the occasion. Among the selections by the band, Mrs. Frank and Misses Allie and Viola McGibeny rendered a pleasing vocal trio. Refreshments were served, consisting of ice cream, strawberries, and cake. After refreshments, Rev. W. G. Clark made the presentation speech, Miss Phila Wood gave a recitation, Mrs. Frank McGibeny a vocal solo, and Hugh McGibeny a violin solo. The following is a list of the presents, we omit the names, there being 100, all together, attached to the various articles:

It was just an ordinary scrap of wrapping paper, but it saved her life. She was in the last stages of consumption, told by her physicians that she was incurable and could live only a short time; she weighed less than seventy pounds. On a piece of wrapping paper she read Dr. King's New discovery, and got a sample bottle; it helped her, she bought a large bottle, it helped her more, bought another, and grew better fast, continued its use and is now strong, healthy, rosy, plump, weighing 140 pounds. It consists in the collection of the specifics cured by noted specialists of Europe and America and bringing them within the reach of all. For instance, the treatment perfected by special physicians who treat inflammation, strangury and liver troubles only, was obtained and prepared. The treatments of other physicians, celebrated for curing catarrh, were procured, and so on till those incomparable cures now include disease of the lungs, kidneys, female weakness, rheumatism, nervous debility and piles. MY DARLING'S PICTURE.

BY ZEPPIE. FORNSUM-MANSFORD.

"I will paint my darling's picture,
"Her form and her face I will take;
All the dainty curves and dimples
None can equal in the land.

"And while I'm busy with her picture,
"Her form and sit here by my side;
And when I have it all completed,
"Say if you know my future bride."

Kitty came as per requested,
Soon was seated at my right
But the happy look had vanished,
Not a dimple was in sight.

Silence reigned, and still I painted
Golden curls caught back with blue,
Falling o'er the snow white shoulders,
With the sunlight dancing thro'.

Then those eyes so bright and changeful,
Sometimes blue and sometimes gray,
With the curling lashes sweeping
Cross rosy cheeks in witching way.

Till at last I was all completed,
Then held up for her to see;
When the little rogue, all dimples,
Said, "Why! Frank, it looks like me."

"Of course it does, you little darling;
I love you better than my life."
That is what I said in answer,
And now sweet Kitty is my wife.

UNDER THE SHADOW OF DEATH.

BY MARCO O. ROLFE.

HAVE you a detective?"

"I am."

"Your name?"

"John Sanson."

"Ah! Come at once to 301 Scott street."

"The residence of Mr. Abel Booker?"

"Yes."

"What has occurred out of the usual order?"

"Mr. Booker is dead."

"Dead?"

"Yes."

"When did he die?"

"Last night—murdered!"

"Murdered!"

"Yes—shot through the head."

"Heavens! Is any one suspected?"

"Yes; his nephew, Paul Rogers."

"Impossible!"

"But true, nevertheless."

"On what ground is he suspected?"

"Last week Abel Booker made a will in his nephew's favor."

"Perfectly natural."

"Yet some people think otherwise."

"Who?"

"Other relatives."

"Name them."

"Simon H. Booker,"

"His brother?"

"Yes."

"He is not finding fault with the will, though?"

"Yes, he is; and there are others, too, who find fault with it."

"Name them."

"Alfred Booker."

"If I mistake not he is a son of the last mentioned."

"Yes.

"Any one else?"

"Yes; Henry Booker."

"Another brother of the murdered man?"

"Yes."

"And all these persons suspect that Paul Rogers killed their relative?"

"All have expressed such a suspicion."

"All together?"

"No; separately."

"Since when?"

"Since the body was found."

"When was that?"

"Early this morning."

"Where?"

"In Mr. Booker's own room."

"Shot, did you say?"

"Yes; through the head, and stone dead."

"Terrible! Might it not have been suicide?"

"There seemed to be nothing to indicate it."

"I will go at once to the house."

So saying, Sanson, the celebrated New York detective, beckoned to his visitor to follow him and left his office, going down the stairs two or three at a time, and never pausing until he hailed a Broadway stage.

"Come on," he said, sententiously, as he entered the vehicle. "We have no time to lose. Now give me the particulars of the crime as far as you know them."

His companion had told literally all he knew, and no amount of skillful pumping could elicit from him any further information.

In half an hour the train stood before the door of 301 Scott street, a stately residence to which they were soon admitted.

On the floor in his own room, evidently in exactly the same position in which he had fallen, lay the dead body of Abel Booker.

Near by stood the dead man's nephew—Paul Rogers.

This person was a man of twenty-five, with dark, expressive eyes and a manly face—such a young man as one instinctively warms up to, believes in and wishes "God speed."

Sanson accosted him.

"Your name, sir."

"The name was given.

"You are a nephew of the dead man's?"

"Yes."

"And his expectant heir?"

The young man nodded his head.

"You were in high power with him, were you not?"

"Yes—I think so."

"So I thought. And he was ever kind and indulgent to you?"

"In the extreme."

"No doubt you appreciated him warmly?"

"No man ever loved a father better."

"So I understood. Now, give me particulars—tell me concerning the murder."

"I know little about it—nothing except what you know already."

Sanson stooped and examined the body carefully.

"He was shot in the right temple," he mused. "One fatal shot accomplished the assassin's purpose."

He then again faced Paul Rogers and gazed searchingly into his eyes.

"The young man does not think," he thought; "if he is a murderer he is a cool one, indeed."

"Mr. Rogers," he asked, "where were you when the murder was committed?"

"In my bed."

"In the house?"

"Yes."

"At what time was your uncle killed?"

"I do not know. Some time during the night."

"You do not know the hour, then?"

"No; but we judge my uncle must have been killed late this morning, or, at least, not long before daylight. The body is even now scarcely cold."

"No one in the house heard the report of the weapon, then?"

"No; and that is the strangest thing about it. My room is only separated from this by a partition and, as you can see, there is a communicating door."

The defective made an examination of the two apartments and saw that what the young man said was true.

He could not repress an exclamation of surprise.

"Ah!" he thought, "It is impossible that this young man should not have heard the report of the weapon, if the murder was committed in this room and he was sleeping in the next one. If he did not himself commit the murder, or is not trying to shield the guilty party, Abe Booker was killed in this room!"

He studied Paul Rogers' face closely, as he asked:

"Was no weapon found?"

"Not yet."

"How did the assassin gain entrance to the house, and how did he go out again?"

"I cannot even guess."

Sanson quickly made an examination of the premises, but found no clue.

"I must look your room over, too," he said, as he pushed past Paul Rogers and walked into the latter's apartments. As he crossed the threshold, he uttered a cry of surprise.

Before him, on the floor, lay a revolver.

It was a small five-shooter, and one of its chambers had been recently emptied.

As the young man saw the weapon in the detective's hand, he cried out:

"Where did you get that?"

"Right here on the floor of your room," said Sanson, sternly. "I see your initials are carved on the handle. Is this weapon yours?"

"It is; but I will swear it was not on the floor where you found it when I was last in this room."

"When was that?"

"About two hours ago, say at seven o'clock. It was at that time that I heard the alarm of murder. I had just finished dressing, and was about to go down stairs for an early breakfast."

"Where was this revolver at that time?"

"Locked up in that small box in the corner."

"When did you last see it?"

"Late last night when I put it in the box."

"Was this chamber then empty?"

"No; I loaded it only yesterday. Every chamber was full when I put it in the box; I am sure of that. I had been carrying the revolver for some time, and only had lately decided to lay it aside and buy a different one when I went down town this morning."

"Mr. Rogers," went on Sanson, coldly; "when were you first aware that your uncle made a recent will in your favor?"

"I am not aware of it."

"Do you not know that, and are you not also aware of the fact that strong influence was being brought to bear upon him to induce him to leave the bulk of his property to Simon H. Booker and Henry Booker, his brothers?"

"I know nothing about it. I never conversed with my uncle or any one else on the subject of his will."

"You are strangely ignorant upon a subject of so great importance to you. Now tell me how you come but you could have opened that box and taken the revolver out of it."

The young man grew slightly pale.

"Ah!" thought the detective. "He is either beginning to be influenced by guilty fear, or he now for the first time realizes what inferences may be drawn from the circumstances as he states them."

"The box was locked," said the young man slowly. "I had and still have the key in my pocket. I am sure no one was in my room until after I left this morning."

"Let me take the key," said Sanson.

The young man did as directed, and the detective opened the box and began to examine its contents.

"Show me where you laid the revolver?"

"Right here, in this little compartment of the tray which forms the upper portion of the box."

"What is under the tray?"

"Some papers, jewelry and other articles of value which I have placed here for safe-keeping. Look and see."

Sanson lifted the tray and emptied the contents of the box on the dressing case.

"What paper is this?" asked the detective, as he selected one of peculiar appearance from among several others and held it up to the young man's view.

"I don't know. I never saw it before."

"Did you not put it here?"

"No."

"It is your uncle's will, bequeathing to you all of his property," said the detective, as he hastily examined the paper. "I will take it and this revolver along. This all has a very bad look for you, young man.

"You don't mean—

"I mean that there is enough circumstantial evidence against you to hang you!" said Sanson. "Don't leave my sight without permission."

"Am I then under arrest?"

"Not exactly, only under my eye," said the detective. "Please send for a surgeon."

Paul Rogers obeyed. Upon his arrival the surgeon was directed to probe the wound in the dead man's head and extract the ball if possible, a task in which he was successful.

The missile was identical in size and make with the four remaining in the five-shooter Sanson had found on the floor of Paul Rogers' room, and which the young man had acknowledged as his own!

Mr. Rogers," said Sanson, "you may now consider yourself under arrest. The case against you seems almost complete, and I assure you it is a most dangerous one."

"Then you think I killed my uncle?"

"I don't say that; but I am afraid an average jury would so decide."

"I am innocent."

That was Paul Rogers' plea on the day his trial began. That was what he said when, three days later, he was asked to state why sentence of death should not be pronounced upon him. That was what he said on the morning of the day appointed for his execution. He made no explanation—attempted none—seemed dazed and sometimes almost heedless of what was passing around him, and of the exciting scenes in which he was the central figure, but always said, calmly:

"I am innocent."

The ghastly preparations for his execution were completed, and the select few who were permitted to witness his death at the hands of the hangman were gathered in that part of the "Tombs" prison set apart for that event, awaiting his appearance. Suddenly a low murmur announced that he had arrived.

"Reprieved?"

No; what a start Paul Rogers, then just about to set out on the march to death, heard this word.

He was aged perceptibly. His once round face was thin and haggard, his cheeks were sunken and full of a wild luster, and his brown hair was streaked with gray. He trembled violently, then calmed himself with an evident effort.

"Why have they prolonged my agony?" he asked of the man of God who stood at his side. "I had thought it was almost over."

At that moment his attorney entered, accompanied by Sanson.

"THE MISSILE WAS IDENTICAL IN SIZE AND MAKE WITH THE FOUR REMAINING IN THE FIVE-SHOOTER."

With two or three deft movements the detective severed the cords with which Paul Rogers had been bound for the gallows, saying eagerly:

"It was I who put these bonds upon you. I take to myself much joy in removing them. I wish I could as readily clear away all memory of the unmerited affliction you have endured. You are all soon be free."

"Yet I passed what I believed was my last night on earth. Am I indeed free, or is this a dream?"

"Your innocence is already established," said his attorney. "Read this."

As he spoke he placed a letter in the young man's hand. It was a hasty scrawl, which ran as follows:

"I, Simon H. Booker, brother of the late Abel Booker, do hereby make known to a retired spot very early on the morning of his death. I made a also repentance. What it was it matters not. Failing to induce him to make a will in my favor, suggesting that in favor of Paul Rogers which he had on his person, I shot him with a revolver exactly like Paul Rogers', and then secreted it in his room, by means gaining admission to the house by the door of communication with the next dead brother's house. After Paul Rogers had left his room that morning I managed to slip back and put the will in it. I did so I found the young man's revolver unexpectedly and withdrew one of the cartridges, afterward dropping the revolver on the floor to complete the chain of circumstantial evidence which has now brought young Rogers to the end of the day appointed for his legal murder. By means of a forged will I hope to get possession of my brother's estate after the execution of Paul Rogers, for I know that he forgives me, and I feel no fear, nothing remorse or despair. When I have finished writing this I shall take my life, for I can not endure mercy on my soul. I trust this may be the means of righting the awful wrong a crime has brought on Paul Rogers, who never injured me in word or deed. This is my judge.

SIMON H. BOOKER."

"And is Simon Booker dead?" asked Paul.

"Yes; he died a horrible death from poison. This letter was found clutched in his hand."

In an hour Paul Rogers was free to go where he listed. He was also, by virtue of his late uncle's will, a very rich man. Life was full of brightness to him as it is not a full such favored ones, but he was a gray, prematurely old young man, who seldom smiled even when his companions laughed loudest, and who never forgot the night which he referred to as the night of the night on earth? The shadow of the gallows was on him ever afterward.

Looking at Paul Rogers one day as he dashed past him on his blooded steed on route for Central Park for an hour's ride, Jack Sanson the detective muttered:

"The sight of that man always makes me ashamed of myself. The thought of the awful fate to which I was instrumental in dooming him makes me shudder. But it makes me proud. A detective is just as apt to be a fool as any other man, and I believe half the fools want to be detectives."

A Brash Young Man.

Referring to the Standard Oil Company recalls an incident, in which the brash young man of the period was one of the best-known newspaper writers in New York some years ago, within a decade, the newspaper man held the position of private secretary to a member of the executive council of the Standard, with an office high up in the big building on Broadway. Shortly after assuming the duties of his position he became greatly annoyed by the visits to his room of a well-dressed every morning of a quietly dressed, middle-mannered man, who persisted in exercising his muscles on a health-lift in one corner of the apartment. The clerk was aware of the visitor unknown to him, and, judging from his appearance, was a person of no consequence around the establishment. The silent and meek-looking man had so aggravated the private secretary that he finally one day blurted out:

"Look here, my friend, I want you to take that blasted apparatus out of here and limber up your joints somewhere else."

The visitor, who until that moment had never spoken a word to the secretary, evinced just the slightest token of surprise for an instant, then quietly responded:

"Certainly, if you wish it." Half an hour later two colored porters removed the objectionable appliance.

The executive council, which consists of heads of departments, met then as now promptly at 11 o'clock daily. Upon this particular morning the new private secretary was called upon by his superior to take some note of the proceedings relating to his department. As the young man entered the room what was his mortification and surprise to observe at the head of the long table, as chairman of the council, the quietly-voiced health-lifter. It was John D. Rockefeller, the President of the Standard Oil Company. He never reverted to the episode—nor, rest assured, did the fresh young secretary.—Philadelphia Press.

WHAT she thought: Mr. Billington—Oh, why do you say 'no?' Miss Covington—Because I didn't think you would take 'no' for an answer.

THE public be blamed, growled the plumber. "They have cheap coal in summer and cheap ice in winter, and yet they grumble and splutter because they can't have things cheap all the time. John, discharge that journeyman. There hasn't been a break in any of his pipe-work for six months. He's meant for a politician, he is, and not for a plumber."

An Oxford County parson tells us this: A young Methodist minister had made application to the Conference for a license. He was very earnestly recommended by the presiding elder, whom the Bishop asked about the applicant's preaching abilities. "Have you ever heard him?" asked the Bishop. "No, sir," replied the presiding elder. "I have never heard him, but he heard me twice, and he stood it like a hero. The license was granted.

HAPPINESS OF THE OLD.

They Are Beyond Selfishness and Have Forgotten Envy.

The old are notoriously strong in matters of judgment, even though their knees may be weak. What so pleasurable as to sit in the seat of the censor? Is a man ever too old for the bench? The longevity and the helplessness of ore more considerable lawyers is a convincing testimony to the advantageousness of their position.

But every old man stands toward the community at large like a judge toward his criminals. Each year broadens his horizon, expands his pleasure and his pastime. Methusela was a man immensely to be envied. What varied lore, what an endless series of graduated pictures he must have stored within him, as the centuries passed and left him high and dry among his pipery fellowmen.

Nothing is easier, it may be said, than to cast together the evils which commonly set upon old age, and thereby to prove that it is absurd to suppose that happiness can exist in the midst of them. Of course, nothing is easier than to catalogue these possible afflictions; but, on the other hand, I contend with my betters that happiness, contentment, or what one of them to call the "summum bonum" we all strive for is quite independent of most of these afflictions. The prudent person, who, old, expects to be tried in this way.

He is prepared, and that is half the battle. Nor must it be forgotten that even as his energies have waned with the years, so also has his body grown, so that his condition well suited to bear physical trials, which, in his youth, would have been insufferable. As a stripling he grumbled without ceasing when a toothache or a sprained ankle kept him within doors; as an octogenarian the chair to which he is confined for a good many hours of the day is to him by far the most comfortable place in all the world. He would not exchange it for the Pope's throne, if the throne were only to be won by a journey to Rome.

But to recur to the moral aspect of the matter. It is not a fact that a good man's goodness increases as he grows older? There is nothing in the world more venerable than a humble but a good old man or woman. Surely that is much, for we have seen in the world just the two things for which we fight hardest during the fighting part of our career? And they may be acquired by the aged without effort.

"It is only older people, after all, who are quite unselfish, and feel the greatest pleasure in witnessing the happiness of others." Miss Thackeray was very right when she wrote this.

It constitutes the keenest joy of retirement old age; a joy to which the wild pleasures, are as nothing at all. It is almost impossible, made as we are, for the young to be disinterestedly happy in the happiness of others. Envy and jealousy are ever on the alert to mar the happiness of others. But the old are doubly gladdened by the visible joy of others. They are generous enough to rejoice because others are profited. And this is not crabbed, they often also find cause to congratulate themselves that their own sing tranquillity is not the result of being disturbed by the like boisterous agents of felicity.

It is for their peace and resignation that I most admire the old. They have attained Nirvana. The world's game, confessedly not an unamazing one, is nearly played out. They are on the heights of Pisgah, whereas we are wandering in the plain or groaning in the valleys near the visitor unknown to them, and, judging from his appearance, was a person of no consequence around the establishment. The silent and meek-looking man had so aggravated the private secretary that he finally one day blurted out:

"Look here, my friend, I want you to take that blasted apparatus out of here and limber up your joints somewhere else."

The visitor, who until that moment had never spoken a word to the secretary, evinced just the slightest token of surprise for an instant, then quietly responded:

"Certainly, if you wish it." Half an hour later two colored porters removed the objectionable appliance.

The executive council, which consists of heads of departments, met then as now promptly at 11 o'clock daily. Upon this particular morning the new private secretary was called upon by his superior to take some note of the proceedings relating to his department. As the young man entered the room what was his mortification and surprise to observe at the head of the long table, as chairman of the council, the quietly-voiced health-lifter. It was John D. Rockefeller, the President of the Standard Oil Company. He never reverted to the episode—nor, rest assured, did the fresh young secretary.—Philadelphia Press.

Good Literature.

Did you ever pause to think of the vast amount of good literature given away in our country? This inquiry was suggested by a few facts relative to the merits of the well-known medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla. Hundreds of cook books have been issued within a few years by this concern. Hood's book of parlor games has also contributed to the enjoyment of perhaps millions of people, as four or five millions of the books have been published. The new book of home-made candies, also issued by the famous Lowell firm, now has been in great demand the past winter. Thousands upon thousands of boxes of Hood's Calendar is something wonderful. In all, the annual output by C. I. Hood & Co. reaches the enormous quantity of 25,000,000 pieces, or one for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

It may be said that they wouldn't do this if it didn't pay. They do not do it. The proprietors of this medicine are proud of it, to be purely patriotic, and they certainly cannot afford to advertise a poor article. There must be merit in the medicine to account for its continued increasing sale which it has, and also to warrant expenditures of such a character for the purpose of spreading its fame in territory where Hood's Sarsaparilla is unknown. No amount of advertising can long sustain an article devoid of merit. The testimonials and thousands of letters received by the proprietors of this medicine from people who have been benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla, show that it does do good. It must do good when it can afford to advertise in such a liberal way as it does. This is the best class of advertising.—Buffalo (N. Y.) Express.

New Firm.

"Where did you hear your new dress, Bridget?" asked a lady in suburban Roxbury the other day of her newly imported Irish domestic.

"At Push & Pull's store on Washington street it was, ma'am," replied the girl.

"Push & Pull's?" queried the mistress. "I don't think I recall any such firm in Boston. Are you not mistaken as to the name?"

"I think not, ma'am," said Bridget, confidently. "At any rate, that's phwat it said on the door."

Over the Pathless Ocean.

Athwart vast countenets traversed by mighty rivers, through seas almost like the boundless Pacific, myriads set forth daily to encounter the vicissitudes of climate, to meet the accustomed food, and as atmosphere possibly unusual, yet with calm confidence that their health will be preserved. When this confidence is based upon the possession of the expert medicinal defense, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it is indeed well founded, otherwise not. Malarial water, bad food, the wearying and other bad effects of railroad jolting, sea sickness and nervousness, induced by a journey and the attendant discomforts, are shorn of their terrifying power by this sterling alterative, purifier and compensating medicine. Invaluable for dyspepsia, biliousness, nervousness, debilitation, malarial disorders, rheumatism and kidney complaints.

DUBBLY—What's the matter; why do you make such frightful grimaces? Dudely—These infernal shoes are too tight. Durely—Why don't you get rid of them, then? Dudely (philosophically)—I don't want to. They're not exactly comfortable, you know, but then they help a fellow forget a whole lot of his other miseries.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Why They Lead.

Dr. Pierce's medicines outsell all others, because of their possessing such superior curative properties as to warrant the manufacturers in supplying them with the people in the shape of ready-made drugs ready to be sold under, viz.: that they shall either benefit or cure the patient, or all money paid for them will be refunded. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is a specific for catarrh in the head and all bronchial, throat, and lung diseases. It takes its time and gives a fair trial. Money will be refunded if it does not benefit or cure.

"STICK to your business," is very good advice, but still there are agreat many people in the world who have no regular and profitable business to stick too and there are others who are following a line of business which is manifestly unsuited to them. Now, when such is the case, you had better write to L. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., and see if they cannot give you a position. A NEW INVENTION

PALMER'S MAGNETIC INHALER. Patented June 19, 1888. Price, One Dollar.

Magnetism and Menthol as a Remedial and Curative Agent.

From time to time many inventions and devices have been produced upon the market claiming to cure catarrh, hay fever, bronchitis, etc. Many claims are said to contain electric or magnetic properties.

Dr. Palmer is a gentleman who has devoted a life of study to the subject of catarrh and diseases of the nasal passages, and has for some time since been engaged in the manufacture of a device for determining whether any combination set up a healing power or not. Dr. Palmer's device, after making a series of experiments, was finally adopted as being the best method, when combined with a medicinal agent, to test the claims of many inventions. The Inhaler is a small tube, in which there are contained and effectual was a question of the Menthol, which, when inhaled, gives a cooling effect, and when inhaled through the nose, the healing power of the Menthol is imparted to the inner surface of the nasal passages. The tube is made of hard rubber, and is so constructed that it can be used by any person, and is so simple in its construction that it can be used by any person, and is so simple in its construction that it can be used by any person, and is so simple in its construction

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Preble celebrated Independence Day at Central Lake, where her parents reside.

Mr. Bayling has two sisters and Mr. Knopp one from Chicago visiting them.

The heavy rain on the 3d cooled the air for the 4th so that the day was delightful.

Nearly all of our people attended the celebration at Boyne City. Some took their baskets, those who did not were sorry. The speeches were good, the parks shady and a delightful time enjoyed.

We saw in the Advance items in regard to Sunday school, trout fishing etc. A young man man from this vicinity visits quite often. We supposed the attraction was a purely a feminine one, but may be was mistaken.

The "War Memories" as exhibited here by F. E. Miller and J. H. Kocher on Monday evening was well attended, and all were well paid for their money. Come again comrades.

Advance.

JULY 9.—The Cuba loaded with bark at Platen's dock last week.

A shaft broke in Platen's saw mill last Saturday, necessitating sending to East Jordan for repairs.

Some of our farmers have commenced haying; on new ground the the hay crop is good.

Winter wheat in this part of the country is looking well. The wheat midge is reported to be thick in some places, but how much damage will result therefrom remains to be seen.

According to present appearances there will be lots of buckwheat pancakes in this part of the country next winter, as a large acreage has been sown to buckwheat.

Mr. L. E. Phillips, while a resident of Advance refused to pay his poll tax, and our pathmaster David Norton commenced a suit against him which was tried in Boyne City, last Friday resulting in Mr. Phillips coming out second best to the tune of about thirty dollars. We understand he intends to carry it up.

About all of our folks went to Boyne City the 4th. Quite a large crowd was there and all appeared to enjoy themselves. Unfortunately for your correspondent there was no prize offered for good looks, and we did not compete for any of the other prizes, we thought of walking out to the end of the crowned poles, pick up the little flag and walk back again but concluded there were others who wanted the prize more than we did so we generously left it for some one else.

Inwood.

A good many of Inwood people attended the 4th at Charlevoix. All report a good time.

The rain on the 3d did a great deal of good to crops here as it comes off warm after rain.

O D. Hilton has a hive of bees that have swarmed three times and gone back in the same hive every time.

We are all glad to see Wm. Harris home again. He is missed when away from home.

Carrie Hilton is at Ironton and Atwood this week.

Commissioner Cook has received three new steel scrapers for his town.

Olen Weed is drawing tan bark to Smithson's camp.

The Wells boys are preparing to do a big threshing this coming season.

Inwood mourns the death of old Mr. Inwood, after whom this postoffice was named. He was one of the old settlers here and we all mourn the loss. He moved here about 23 years ago. He has one grandchild here, Mrs. Olen Weed.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

Harrison Mitchell has started the erection of a building for a post office between King's grocery and Warne & Calkins' drug store. The building will be 14x30, and convenitly fitted.

The 19th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, will be celebrated with much pomp and ceremony at East Jordan on the 12th, under the auspices of district lodge No. 17 of the Loyal Order of Orangemen.

David Carnegie and J. T. Brightmore of Cleveland, Ohio, were in town some days making a contract with James Ingells for the manufacturing of 25,000 churns.

D. C. Loveday was called to Chicago Friday evening, by a telegram stating his brother was dead.

Eveline.

Frank May, of Boyne, is in town.

Jas. Dunlap returned home on Saturday from Milwaukee.

The dance at Schoffen's hall on the evening of the 4th, was a poor success.

We attended the 4th at Charlevoix and enjoyed ourselves immensely.

We attended the concert given by the McGibbony Family, and think it was very good. Most of our young people went to Charlevoix and report an enjoyable time.

Mr. Palmer, who has the contract for loading the furnace wood on the scows, and while attempting to step from one scow to another on Wednesday of last week, he slipped and fell between the scows, breaking one of his legs. This is the third time he has broken the same leg above the ankle.

There was no school in the Mountain school-house part of last week and this on account of the teacher being at Charlevoix sick with the mumps.

About six o'clock on the evening of the Fourth, Mrs. D. N. Gregory had reached the ferry, on her way home from Charlevoix, she drove in, horse and buggy on the ferry-scow, and when nearly across the area, the horse backed off with the buggy into the water, notwithstanding the efforts of Mrs. Gregory and the ferry man to stop him. Mrs. Gregory was fortunately not in the buggy or she would have been drowned. She recovered her parcels, but lost her pocket-book which was lying on the seat. Afterward the arm was dragged and the buggy found, but no trace of the horse. The horse was worth $200. It is thought that the county will have to stand the loss, as the ferry has for some time been considered unsafe.

JULY 9.—Haying has begun; so has the mosquitoes and black flies.

There was a council of doctors from Ann Arbor, Sunday, at Albert Normans, to decide upon a treatment for Mrs. Norman.

Rev Stitts filled his appointment at Burgess last Sunday, and will be there every two weeks.

The 4th passed off very quietly and every one seemed to enjoy themselves.

JULY 10.—We are having beautiful growing weather just now, and crops in this vicinity are looking splendid.

Mr. Galbraith had his barn moved yesterday from where it was built last winter on Washington street to his present place of residence. Mr. Burdick did the job.

The ladies of the M. E. church will give a social at Purvis hall this evening, for the benefit of the pastor we believe.

A large number of our people spent the 4th at Charlevoix.

THE NEW YORK STAR.
A Daily and Weekly Newspaper.
PROSPECTUS FOR 1889.

THE STAR BUILDING.

The NEW YORK STAR passed into the hands of new managers in November last, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of it.

During the first months of the change the improvement made in it was so pronounced that it came to be recognized at once as

A Live, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the freshest of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are crisp, positive and bold. Its Democratic principles are as pronounced and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, on its recent reorganization, selected it as the medium for placing its official action and utterances before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in nation, State and city; and is the advocate of no individual or the organ of no faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York city on Sunday. The matter selected for this literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest merit and reputation. Their united contributions each Sunday would make a volume as large as Harper's Magazine, and treating of many more subjects than any existing magazine published ever discusses. The whole at a cost of only 5 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in important respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a perfect epitome of the really important news of the week carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in full. Space is given to the class of literature most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to immunize the weekly against scandal. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but to interest him in the general news of the world, leaving the home paper of each subscriber to supply the practical information on all agricultural topics. It is an excellent paper, therefore, to obtain, through favorable club rates, along with the weekly printed in your immediate locality.

TERMS:

For the six months from July 1 to Dec. 31, 1889, the WEEKLY STAR, free of postage to any part of the United States and Canada, outside the limits of New York city:

STRANGE RESURRECTION

OF ANCIENT MOUND BUILDERS AND INDIAN WARRIORS

Exhumed in Digging the Foundations for the International Exposition Buildings in Detroit—Curious and Interesting Facts About Prehistoric Races and Their Works.

In making excavations for the foundations for the buildings for the great Detroit International Exposition, the workmen, a few days ago, unearthed a large number of skeletons. There were nearly 100 skulls and skeletons exhumed, with specimens of pottery, fragments of arrow heads and metal, and other relics. These skeletons seem to have been deposited together in a pit, and then covered with earth. As the place is known to have been used for burial places by the Indians for many generations, it is more than probable that there are hundreds more of this remains in the vicinity. There is a great interest in the fact that so great an enterprise as the International Exposition came so upheaval among the oldest inhabitants, while camping the living and the dead, as it to anything they ever knew or dreamed of. The relics which are made and interesting collection, with additions from other sources, form an archæological exhibit of Indian and prehistoric relics and antiquities at the Exposition.

Michigan is rich in traces of the ancient Mound Builders—a race that preceded the unknown centuries of time the Indians found here upon the advent of the white man. That prehistoric race worked the copper mines of the upper peninsula, wrought it into implements of every kind, made weapons of copper, carried on a wide commerce, and constructed earthworks, fortifications and burial and other mounds.

A TYPICAL BURIAL MOUND

700 to 800 feet long, 300 to 400 feet wide and forty to fifty feet high was a conspicuous object near the site now occupied by the Exposition building. Most of the vast tumulus has disappeared before the plow and spade. It contained thousands upon thousands of skeletons that had been buried in heaps. For generations it was the practice of the Indians of Michigan and parts of Canada to bring many canoe loads of skeletons, at stated periods, to this great mound, and inter them together in shallow pits that were afterward covered with earth. Besides there were many single burials of chiefs and noted warriors.

This mound was originally constructed by a race preceding the Indians, of whose remains have been found in great abundance at a greater depth than the Indian relics. There is no doubt that the earlier occupants of the great mound burned the bones of their dead in heaps and perhaps the flesh also, thus constituting the

A DEADLY WEEK.

Eight or Ten Killed and Many Seriously Injured.

As a result of a freight wreck at Wilmerding, Pa., on the Pennsylvania Railroad, two bodies have been taken from the wreck and it is thought that six or eight more were killed. Trainmen estimate the list of dead and injured at fifteen. A tramp, who escaped from the wreck, said that there were twenty-five people on the train. Of these, but ten or twelve escaped. One of the injured is a colored man. He is so badly hurt that he cannot recover. The train caught fire, and a carload of whisky was ignited in some unknown manner. The accident was caused by a broken axle. The list of killed is as follows:

William Connelly, Scottdale, aged 15 years, residence Pittsburg, killed outright; John Hyde, Scottdale, aged 17 years, residence Pittsburg, on the way to the hospital; an unknown man, aged 25 years, colored, killed outright. The list of injured are as follows: Jas. Hughes, aged 14 years, Pittsburg, right arm and thigh broken, probably fatally hurt; Alfred Young, colored, aged about 25 years, of Johnstown, cut and bruised, and otherwise seriously injured; John Kennedy, aged 22 years, Pittsburg, left arm broken, cut and bruised, will probably recover. A number of others were reported to have been caught in the wreck, but none of them has yet been found. Trains east and west are delayed several hours, both tracks being blocked. The damage will reach many thousands of dollars.

EASTERN FLOODS.

Cyclone and Washout Reported at Amsterdam, N. Y.

A Saratoga, N. Y., dispatch says: Information received here by telephone from Amsterdam states that a big washout at Alico, three miles east from there, had torn up 400 feet of track and cut off all communication west of there. Amsterdam reports an exceedingly heavy rainstorm in that section. Other reports assign the disaster to a cyclone, but the heavy rain in that section affirms beyond doubt that the visitation has been by flood. What has been learned so far leads to the impression that the accident is one of a most serious character, involving extensive losses. A more serious character is given to the story by indefinite stories that there has been considerable loss of life. At Schenectady some of the trains hurrying to make up lost time narrowly escaped the cloud-burst, but all escaped. One house is partly washed away, but no lives are lost.

CARLSON IDENTIFIES BURKE.

The Winnipeg Suspect Confronted by His Former Landlord.

At Winnipeg, Man., Charles J. Carlson, of Chicago, whose evidence was required to complete the story of Martin Burke's alleged connection with Dr. Cronin's murder, was called to testify. After he had been sworn he was asked, "Do you know the prisoner?" "Yes." "Where is he?" "There," replied Carlson, pointing his hand directly at the prisoner. "What is his name?" asked Mr. Howell. "To me his name is Frank Williams," said Carlson. That was the cue that the prosecution desired to establish, namely that Frank Williams and Martin Burke were one and the same man. When Carlson entered the witness-box Burke hung his head, and when witness pointed him out and stated the name Frank Williams, a deep blush suffused his face and he looked like a man who was ashamed of himself. The witness proceeded to tell the story of how he met the prisoner in his father's house on Ashland avenue and subsequent interviews with him.

BY A CONTRACTOR'S NEGLECT.

Collapse of a Crowded Grand Stand at Oklahoma City.

At Oklahoma City, the festivities in honor of the nation's birthday were brought to a sudden and sad ending when the crowded grand stand fell, carrying down nearly one thousand persons and burying hundreds in the debris. Then the victims had been taken out, it was learned that no one was dead, though nine persons were perhaps fatally and many badly injured. The only death thus far is one, the 18-months-old child of Dr. J. A. Ryan, of Jimtown, who died a short time after the accident. The injured are:

Mrs. Dr. Martindale, of Howe, Tex.; Mrs. Willie Campbell, of Blanchard, injured internally and will probably die; Herbert Glover, aged 16, will also probably die; J. W. Mann, Harrison, dangerously; Charles Cottell, Paola Valley, fatally; Tom Reynolds, Oklahoma, serious; J. Yeomanski, Oklahoma, serious; Mrs. Dr. Ryan, Jimtown, serious; Marshall McNeil, Oklahoma, arm torn off.

A detachment of troops under Captain Stiles was at once ordered to the scene, and rendered valuable service in preserving order and conducting the removal of victims with something like system. Over one hundred persons were injured, most of them being hurt in the back, caused by falling timbers. Great indignation is expressed at Contractor Aubrey for the unsafe construction of the stand. He is considered largely responsible for the disaster, as he was warned by his workmen that the stand was not securely braced. He paid no attention to the warnings, and told the men to mind their own business.

THE TRADE BAROMETER.

The Commercial Situation Summarized by a Mercantile Company.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

Business has been fairly maintained in volume, and is gradually improving in prospect. June was a month of exceedingly large business failures. Prices of commodities, in spite of the rise in some speculative markets, have on the whole fallen during the month about 2 per cent., and are now 5 per cent. lower than a year ago, with average values 10 per cent. lower, a sign of substantial improvement in the most important industry of country. The industry situation remains undisturbed. Reports from the iron and coal trades show no disturbing. The half yearly return of railroad earnings shows a considerable gain in June, and than in any other section—about 25 per cent. and 10 in the trans-Mississippi West, this side of the Rocky Mountains, about 50 per cent. in the South, and 20 per cent. in the Southwest but 5 per cent. lower in the Mississippi about 1 per cent. and at the South about 20 per cent. Against a general increase of 5 per cent. in number there is a decrease of 11 per cent. in the average per mile. The cotton crop has changed greatly during the brief week. Nine-tenths is higher, owing to accounts of injury from persistent drought and heat in Texas, Mississippi, where heavy rains have lessened prospects of a large crop, and in Georgia, prospect continue favorable, but rains are weaker, and daily products are coming from west in increasing quantity, so that prices have depressed. Leather does not change, but the revised quotations of wool show a decided advance of about one cent per pound. The demand for wool has been very active, and in part because of scarce supply of cotton goods. The iron market remains strong in tone, with further advances in some lines, as compared with a total of 23 the week previous. The number of failures during the last year the figures were:

WHIRLING WINDS.

Fatal Cyclone in a Southern Dakota Community.

At Kron ber, D. T., a terrific wind-storm demolished nearly every building and killed two children. The west cloud was black and warm until noon, when the wind rose with wonderful fury, striking the town at about 3 o'clock and sweeping a path across the county. It was so sudden that no effort to escape could be made, and many injuries to persons are reported. Van Dusen's elevator was the first to go, blowing to fall, and directly afterward the large barn of Dr. McKenney was struck and instantly demolished. The residences of Harrison Franklin and John Sandy next succumbed to the violence of the storm, and at length the residence of Benjamin Franklin and the blacksmith shop of Joseph Matelbaum were leveled to the ground as the whirlwind passed away to the east. Matelbaum was badly injured by the falling of his shop, as he had rushed in to save some property. Many other persons in the town were hurt. The two children of a farmer just east of the town were killed.

STRIKERS GIVE BATTLE.

A Fatal Riot Between Laborers and the Police.

The striking laborers at Duluts, Minn., the other day attempted to intimidate a gang of workmen who would not stop work. Forty police were guarding the gang of seventy men at work on a sewer trench when a mob of strikers attacked them. It is believed that the first shot was fired by one of the strikers, but it was not was followed by volleys on both sides. The fighting lasted for half an hour when Company K came to the assistance of the police and drove the rioters from the streets. The list of dead and wounded so far is as follows:

Dead—Ed Johnson, Fatally wounded—Tom Fleutmann, George Peterson. Slightly wounded—Max Mack, Mike Olson, George Collin, Jacob Lundquist, Jacob Lundquist, Jr., Charles John Stay, Edward Quinnette, Ben Dahl, Hans Martin, A. Falstor, M. C. Langlelen, Captain Mclaughlin, Sergeant Clements. Officers Sore—Hayden, Donovan, Kilgore, and Wolkovitz. Private Farrel.

ROBBED A MONASTERY.

The Trappist Monks of Montreal Relieved of $4,000 in a Trust.

At Montreal a robbery took place within the walls of the monastery. A Frenchman, attired in the garments of a Trappist monk, claiming to have just arrived from abroad, entered the institution and asked for Father Gibbon, who at that time was ill and could not be seen. The Trappist order is highly esteemed by Catholics, and this man was received with open arms. He became intimate with Father Stewart of the Trappist establishment, who had just disposed of $4,000 worth of butter and had deposited the money in his room. The stranger went quietly to his room, took the money, and left. No trace of the thief can be found.

MANITOBA'S EX-PREMIER DEAD.

He was a half-breed of Scotch and Creek extraction, and was a remarkable orator. He was a member of the Manitoba Government for fifteen years, during most of the time as Premier. He was 48 years old, and his death will cause a great sensation in the Northwest.

Full particulars of the accident have not been received, but it is known that the Emperor's injuries are not serious.

This does not include the loss of the Cambria Iron Company, the Johnstown Manufacturing Company, the Cambria and Westmoreland Natural Gas Companies and others.

SULLIVAN IS CHAMPION.

KILRAIN DEFEATED BY BOSTON'S FAMOUS PUGILIST.

The Great Battle of the Giants at Richburg, Miss.—Seventy-five Rounds Fought. Although the Contest Was Virtually Settled in the Third—Details of the Fight.

The great battle for the championship of the world, $20,000, and the Sun championship belt, between John L. Sullivan and Jake Kilrain, was fought on a piece of ground in Richburg, Miss., about 80 miles from New Orleans, in seventy-five rounds, occupying two hours and five minutes, the contest being brought up for Kilrain in the end of the time. The battle was one of the most brutal ever fought, and, although the contest was long, it was virtually settled in the third round, when Sullivan's war whoop could not prove to be the wonderful wrestler represented, for Sullivan threw as much as he was thrown, and with far greater severity. The day was intensely hot, and this added to the discomfiture of the men. The crowd, composed of New Orleans men, the refuse. most deliberate manner. He equalized matters somewhat, however, by the terrible punishment of Sullivan, who once sat down on Kilrain's head, and, if the latter had been a man, he would have died. Oh, I have waited so for the train to come.

"Each day's delay has increased my frenzy to the highest pitch and now I cannot restrain myself. I have waited for weeks in agony for the train to come. He began to crush Sullivan with his weight. The result was the other way.

Kilrain was forced to come by in the first two rounds and had him punished not a little. In the third round Sullivan's left eye was black, his nose was badly disfigured, and his mouth was a mass of bruises. Kilrain's left side was also badly bruised, and he was weaker than Sullivan, only one step into the swift current and all is done. My body instead of his shall be picked up and buried with the unknown dead, if ever found. Good-by, Ed. Always be true to Ireland and——"

This letter had been so long in the water that it was almost impossible to read it. There was no address on the envelope, but it was illegible save for the letter "J." It was written by mistake. The letter is now in the possession of Superintendent Byrnes, which leads color to the authenticity of the letter in the fact that on Friday a decomposed body of a man was buried without identification at Drummondville.

The South York Club Blamed for the Riot at Jonesville.

JONESTOWN, Pa., July 8.—The board of inquiry, which has just completed a registration of all property losses in the Conemaugh valley, made its report to Chairman Cummins, representing Gov. Beaver's relief commission. The report divided the sufferers into six classes, the first class being those who were in opulent circumstances before the flood, and who should continue to suffer in the hope that by some Congressional enactment they may be reimbursed for their losses. The second class is composed of those who are in good circumstances, but

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

TAKE A RECEIPT.

Whenever a payment is made on subscription or wood or produce, we want every person so paying to call at the office and get a receipt for the money, without proper credit may be given on the books. Unless this is done, mistakes may be considerable annoyance, we are almost sure to follow. Please remember it.

SIX YEARS OLD.

This issue completes the sixth year of the publication of the JOURNAL.

Those years have witnessed the usual experiences of a new paper,—the ups and downs, the frequent struggle for very existence,—and it seemed sometimes a bare escape from suspension. But each year the paper has grown stronger in public estimation, the circulation is bona fide and not forced, the losses from dead-beat subscribers are growing less, and the advertising is more as a business transaction and less as a bonus. For all these considerations, the outlook is brighter and the future is more encouraging than ever before. And for these considerations, we feel safe in promising that the paper in the future will do more effectively the work a newspaper ought and is expected to do in the upbuilding of a community.

No newspaper ever printed completely satisfied all its patrons. There never will be printed and published a paper that can please all its patrons in all respects—it is absolutely impossible. So when we bring this paper to that point of insuring a profit to its patrons and to the publisher, and at the same time the feeling of dissatisfaction with its course to the minimum, we have brought it nearest to absolute success.

Such we believe to be the standing of the JOURNAL today, and for this we are thankful. But we are not content to stop with this. We shall strive in every honorable manner to increase not only the circulation of the paper, but its value as a means of advertising the advantages of Charlevoix as a home and as a point for the establishment of small manufacturing industries; on these depend our stability and permanent growth.

We solicit, and hope to merit and receive, the business and support of every man or woman of Charlevoix county who has the permanent welfare of the county at heart.

The Michigan Press Association held its 22d annual meeting in Grand Rapids last week. About 150 newspaper men were in attendance, some accompanied by their wives. The sessions on Tuesday and Wednesday were devoted to business. On Thursday, the forenoon was devoted to a drive about the city in carriages, and to an examination of some of the principal manufacturing institutions; the afternoon to a clam bake at Reed Lake, and to a dance at the O-wash-ta-tong club house. On Friday the association was given an excursion over the Chicago & West Michigan Railway to St. Joseph, thence to Chicago by steamer City of Detroit, of the Detroit & Cleveland Steam Navigation Co., returning to their homes on Saturday. No body of men could ask or expect a more hearty welcome or more generous treatment, than was accorded the Michigan editors by the citizens of Grand Rapids on this occasion. Especial credit is due Maj. J. W. Long, of the Soldiers Home, secretary of the committee of arrangements, and to Capt. W. A. Gravett, chairman of the committee on transportation, for their successful efforts to make everything pleasant for the visitors.

Promulgate the New Laws.

"Ignorance of the law" is no excuse for a man's guilt, is the law of the land and it could not be otherwise. If it was, every guilty person would plead ignorance and thus escape punishment. This being a fact, it would seem there ought to be some means taken whereby every person that can read should have no excuse for being ignorant of the laws of this state, but be given an opportunity to inform themselves.

Every two years the legislature meets in Lansing and makes and unmakes the laws, and the people have no means of knowing what the changes are or what new laws are enacted, and yet they must know the law at all times. It could seem but fair if the people should be given a chance by the state to inform themselves in regard to all new laws.

In Wisconsin after every session of the legislature the new laws and all amendments to old ones are published in supplement form in every paper in the state, they receiving a fair remuneration for this work. As every reading person is supposed to have at least one newspaper each for perusal there can be no possible excuse in that state for a person to be ignorant of the laws.

Now as for expense. Every newspaper man knows and every intelligent reader ought to know, that there are thousands of dollars annually thrown away printing reports of state officers. A visit to any county clerk's office will convince the most skeptical on this point, as cords of documents are sent them for distribution and it is impossible to hire men to carry the stuff away, it being absolutely no good to any one. Then, why not use the money that is now being wasted for this purpose and use it for a good one, that of publishing the laws of the state enacted at each session of the legislature in all the state papers?—Caro Democrat.

Another Railroad for Traverse City.

The Traverse Herald claims to have information that the officers of the Chicago & West Michigan Railway have ordered the construction of the extension from Baldwin to Traverse City, 75 miles, and that the work will begin at once at both ends of the line. The Herald says: "The survey for this extension was made nearly two years ago, and for the last few weeks active work has been done all along the line in securing right of way, re-setting grade stakes, building camps and making other necessary preliminary preparations. Bids have been advertised for the reconstruction of the road, and these will be opened on the 15th, and it is expected that work will begin at once, at both ends of the road, here and at Baldwin. That portion of the road between this place and the Manistee river, a distance of 45 miles' will be built from this end, and the 30 miles south of the Manistee from the Baldwin end of the extension. The work will be pushed as rapidly as possible all along the line."

The Investment Here of Foreign Capital.

Isn't there an undue tendency in some quarters to exult over recent great transfers of British capital to this country for the purpose of maintaining a controlling interest in large industries? A real political economist would consider both sides of the picture. If it were possible for British capitalists to secure possession of any material proportion of the whole business of the country, there would be something beside rejoicing at the fact. Nice opine. Whatever British capital goes into manufacturing or other business in the United States will be planted here, but the profits will go abroad and enrich people who will expend their surplus in England, or wherever the foreign capital comes from. This might prove a serious state of affairs, and in its mitigated form cannot but lessen the volume of prosperity. Too much absentee capital might drag down a nation even as rich as is our own.—Boston Transcript.

CATARRH.—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are now generally cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once a week. Send N. B. For catarrhal discharges peculiar to climates subject to this malady, a pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 1bo6tp

Is Consumption Incurable.

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "Was down with abscess of lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an incurable consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jessie Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had a lung been for yr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Trouble. Was given up by the doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottle free at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 3

A Narrow Escape.

Col. W. K. Nelson, of Brooklyn, came home one evening feeling a peculiar tightness in the chest. Before retiring, he tried to draw a long breath but found it almost impossible. He suffered four days from pneumonia, and the doctors gave him up. Dr. Acker's English Remedy for Consumption saved him and he is well to-day. Sold by G. W. Beaman, druggist.

Promptness.

First a cold, then a cough, then consumption, then death. "I took Dr. Acker's English Remedy for Consumption in the morning I began to cough, and I believe it saved my life."—Walter N. Wallace, Washington. Sold by G. W. Beaman, druggist. 3

Michigan's the State, After All.

The Port Austin, Mich., Post, last week published the following letter from "H. Morran, brother of James Morran of Grindstone City, arrived home Friday last from a three years' stay near Jamestown, Dak. He gives a poor remuneration for this work. As every reading person is supposed to have at least one newspaper each for perusal there can be no possible excuse in that state for a person to be ignorant of the laws.

Now as for expense. Every newspaper man knows and every intelligent reader ought to know, that there are thousands of dollars annually thrown away printing reports of state officers. A visit to any county clerk's office will convince the most skeptical on this point, as cords of documents are sent them for distribution and it is impossible to hire men to carry the stuff away, it being absolutely no good to any one. Then, why not use the money that is now being wasted for this purpose and use it for a good one, that of publishing the laws of the state enacted at each session of the legislature in all the state papers?—Caro Democrat.

The Tariff is a Tax.

"Were it not for the Republican tariff," says the Inter-Mountain, of Butte, Mont., organ of the copper miners, "copper would be selling at 8 or 9 cents." Copper actually sells at 12 cents. The duty is 4 cents. And still we are told that the tariff is not a tax.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The Teacher

Who advised her pupils to strengthen their minds by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, proved the truth that bodily health is essential to mental vigor. For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is remarkably beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's—the only $1 Sarsaparilla worth $5 a bottle.

"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. Jas. H. Leslie, Stoneham, Mass.

"I have taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great benefit to my general health."—Miss Thirza L. Crozier, Palmyra, Mich.

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Dinkham, South Medway, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and feel confident that my present health and prospect life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Moffitt, Killingly, Conn.

"Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 79 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: 'After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and found that taken half of it my usual health returned.'"

BERT MASON.

The song service last Sunday afternoon was so successful and satisfactory that Mr. McGibney has decided to continue them every Sunday afternoon during the summer. His object is to encourage hearty congregational singing in our churches and the efforts are certainly worthy of commendation and support.

The Allen hill on south Bridge street has been graded to a gradual slope from Hulbert street at the top of the hill to Mason street at the bottom, and is now being chiped. When the improvements are all completed, it will be a much better street. A stone wall will be necessary on both sides to hold the lots from caving into the street again.

On Saturday, July 27th, there will be a game of old-fashioned base ball, between the Charlevoix and Chicago resort base ball teams. It will be remembered that two years ago there was a contest, resulting in favor of Chicago. The contest is to be renewed, and the Charlevoix resort team hopes to reverse the result. It will undoubtedly be a very interesting game.

The Bellaire Advertiser copied what the JOURNAL had two weeks ago about "Railroad Prospects," and says: "The man who is in position to know, may know and may lie like the dickens all the same. We have not the slightest faith in these 'surprises.' There is no occasion for any secrecy and if they are ready for business let 'er drive.' Will the Advertiser please state how many Bellaire has invested in that railroad, and what her citizens are now doing toward a loan. As a general thing, those who howl the loudest about not doing anything are those who have given the least in cash, or honest labor to help the enterprise along, and it would not surprise us to find this just such a case. While we are discussing this matter, we have permitted to state that it is possible to build a road out of Charlevoix which will not go through Bellaire, and if they don't want the road they are not compelled to have it. There are other towns ready, yes anxious, to help it along their way, if it will only miss Bellaire.

THE PANGS OF HUNGER.

Perhaps the most remarkable instance of imprisonment in the snow of a descending avalanche occurred in the hamlet of Bergoletto, in the valley of the upper Stura, at the foot of the Alps, near the fortress of Demonte, in Piedmont. Three persons survived an incarceration of five weeks. It was in the winter of 1755, when the fall of snow had been so heavy that there was danger that its weight would break through the roofs of the houses. On the 19th of March, therefore, some of the people tried to avoid the danger by removing the snow from their housetops. Among those so engaged was a man named Roccia, and his son, a lad of 15.

The village clergyman was at this time leaving his house for his church, when he saw two avalanches descending. Calling to Roccia and his son, he returned speedily to his own dwelling. Father and son instantly fled toward the church. They had not run more than forty yards when the lad fell close behind his father, who, turning around to assist his son, was seized with horror on seeing that his own house and the houses of his neighbors were buried beneath an enormous pile of snow. His earthly all was swallowed up—his wife, sister, children, gone! The shock overcame him, and he fainted. His son soon recovered, and helped his father to the house of a friend; but he was five days before he was sufficiently restored to make any excursions in seeking his lost ones.

When, after five weeks of incessant labor, they were delivered, the imprisoned women were too weak to move, and were shrunk almost to skeletons. With great tenderness they were removed to the house of a friend, where their wants were supplied with care and affection. The daughter recovered sooner, and the unmarried woman was able to walk in a week or two; but Roccia's wife, who had been in a more cramped position than the rest, was the last to regain the use of her limbs; and her eyes were ever affected with dimness, from being suddenly brought out of her prison into the light of day.

We give a description of their imprisonment from the lips of Roccia's wife. When the dire calamity befell them, she was in the stable with her sister. They had gone there with some rye-flour grief for one of the goats. Roccia's daughter and a younger son were with the women, standing in a corner among the animals, waiting for the sound of the bell to go to church. In the stable were a donkey, six goats and half a dozen fowls. Roccia's wife was about to leave the stable to go to her own house. Scarcely had she reached the stable door, when she heard the warning voice of the minister. Looking up, she saw the descending avalanche, and heard a sound as of another at some little distance. She hurried back into the stable and told her sister and the children.

In a few minutes the snow descended upon the building, crushing in the roof and part of the ceiling. To save themselves they got into the rack and manger, the latter being under the main posts of the building, and therefore able to bear the immense pressure. They occupied, however, a very uncomfortable posture, crouching against the wall in a space only a little more than a yard in breadth. They had escaped instant death, but the more painful and lingering death by famine seemed certainly to await them. They were oppressed with the thought of how they could subsist under such circumstances. The children did not lose heart; they said they had had breakfast, and could do very well until the next morning. The aunt had a few chestnuts in her pocket, and two each of those served for their supper, with snow water as a beverage.

In the bake-house near the stable was the whole product of yesterday's baking. They made repeated attempts to force their way through the snow to the bake-house, but all in vain. There was only one resource left, and that was the goat. This supply seemed invaluable. On the second day they felt the pangs of hunger; they divided the remaining chestnuts among them, and also a quart of goat's milk. The third day they made another attempt to get to the bake-house; but the weight of the snow was too much for them, so they gave up all hopes of help from that direction. They were therefore shut up to the milk of the one goat.

To feed the goats was now one great object. Over the manger where they lay was a hole into the hayloft; through this hole they pulled down the fodder into the rack; and when they could no longer reach it, the sagacious creatures climbed upon their shoulders and helped themselves.

At the end of the first week, the boy began to sink. He had complained of great pain in his stomach. His mother nursed him in her lap for a whole week, when he desired to die his length in the manger. His hands and lips were cold, and his respiration feeble. His mother put a little milk to his lips, but he could not take it; then, with one tender cry, "Oh, my father in the snow! Oh, father, father!" he expired.

Through the whole of their imprisonment they were in total darkness. For nearly three weeks the crowing of the cock enabled them to distinguish night from day; but at the end of this term chanticleer died, and his companion followed him one by one. Then they literally took "no note of time." The donkey and the goats were restless for some time, but at length they fell a prey to hunger and exhaustion. The milk of the first goat gradually diminished, but the kidding of the second increased the supply, and as they killed the kid, though with great reluctance, the supply held out until the day of their deliverance. The poor goat became a great solace to them, as it was so tame as to lick their hands and face. The poor creature was ever afterward an object of great affection in the family.

We need only add one or two interesting facts. During their five weeks' imprisonment they suffered very little uneasiness from hunger after the first week. The effluvia from the dead animals was far more disagreeable, as also the smoke which infested the place, and the great coldness of the snow, water which trickled over them. The constrained position was also a source of great misery. During the whole of the time, Mrs. Roccia had one daughter and sister had intervals of repose equal to their nightly rest. Their deliverance was a time for great thankfulness to all concerned; and many a winter evening was spent in relating around their humble hearth the sufferings, the mercies, and deliverance of that eventful time.

The English-man Was Silenced.

An Englishman was being entertained in a Mission street tenter one evening, when the conversation turned upon the difference between English and American cities.

"One thing is very shocking to us," the Englishman observed, "and that is in the many cases of violence in the streets here. That, you know, is so different in the English city."

"Different?" exclaimed one of the young ladies who was entertaining the guest; "I never saw half the violence in the streets here that I have in England. Why, when we were injured last summer we started out one day to take a walk, and we found ourselves in the street from the hotel when a horrible great drunken fishwife came up to me without any provocation and offered to fight me for sixpence. I never was so frightened in all my life."

"What did you do? Call the police?" she asked.

"Call the police?" she echoed, "there were no police in sight to call. I don't know what I should have done if a coal-heaver hadn't come along and volunteered to take the quarrel off my hands by fighting the horrible creature for nothing."

"And you got away without harm?"

"Yes; but I never had anything like that happen to me on the streets of an American city."

"No," the visitor responded drily, "it couldn't, you know. An American coal-heaver would have charged you at least double for taking the affair off your hands."

"Very likely," coolly put in a young lady who had not yet spoken, "but that is the way of things in England are even coal-heavers fond of fighting for women."

The conversation was found to be taking a turn that would on the whole not prove conducive to social harmony, and the subject was therefore dropped.—Boston Courier.

Cookey's Awful Vengeance.

An original method of wreaking vengeance on an unfaithful lover has been adopted by a deceived damsel. The man was a tailor and the woman a cook, who, when she heard that the gay deceiver had given her up for a spruce dressmaker, armed herself with a pint bottle of spavins and a bottle of vitriol and proceeded to the lodging of the false-hearted swain. What she would have done had she met the tailor in the flesh can only be conjectured in a vague and speculative manner, but it happened that he was out, so she set to work on his Sunday clothes. These she pulled out of the wardrobe wherein they lay, strewed them on a table and cut them into ribbons with her scissors. She next sprinkled vitriol over the left side of the tailor's best coat, vest, and pocket handkerchiefs to vicious touches of the same corrosive substance. Then she went away satisfied, but was arrested the next morning, according to a legal phrase rather appropriate to the circumstances, "at the suit" of the tailor.—London Telegraph.

TARAHUMARI INDIANS.

AN INTERESTING TRIBE OF SAVAGES IN MEXICO.

They Are Probably Descendants of the Historic City Builders—Lieut. Schwatka's Account of His Visit Among Those Curious People.

EUROPEOPLE to evote most of this article to a consideration of the Tarahumari Indians of Western and Southwestern Chihuahua, a tribe of aboriginies that I have occasionally seen mentioned in works and articles on Mexico, and especially the northern part, but of whom I can find no detailed account anywhere in the literature I have of this region, writer Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka from Cuhinaloa, Mexico, to the Chicago Inter Oceans.

Although the Tarahumari tribe of Indians are not at all well known—for I doubt if one reader in a thousand of this article has ever heard of them—they are, nevertheless, a very numerous people, and were they in the United States or Canada, where statistics of even the savages are very much better kept than in this country, they would have an almost world-wide knowledge of themselves spread before the people.

They are now known seen in Chihuahua City, or even on the other lines radiating out to the many Western points drawing many of their supplies from this railroad town, and it is only after the mule trails to the deeply hidden mountain fastnesses are taken that they are seen at all.

If a person cuts loose from these, too, he will be most likely to see them in all their rugged primitiveness, for most of them, seen by the usual white traveler to these parts, are called civilized, living in log huts, tilling a little bit of the mountain slope, and living generally not unlike the lower classes of Mexico, which they have evidently taken as a guide in their new departure from established habits. It is no uncommon thing for these Indians to said about them more than to mention occasionally where they once lived in a country now held by a higher civilization.

Though a peaceful tribe of Indians as far as their relations with Mexicans have always been, they nevertheless were not wanting at all in all the elements that made them good defenders of their land and the Apaches, so dreaded by all others gave the numerous country of the Tarahumaris a wide berth when on their raids in this direction. The Tarahumaris, equally with those which have seen were more than a match for these Bedouins of the boundary line between our own country and Mexico.

As I also had ever seen a group of the wild Tarahumaris would never credit them with anything warlike or aggressive, or even with much of the defensive combativeness that is necessary to fight for one's country. They are shy and bashful to a point of childishness that I have never seen before among Indians or other savages.

In appearance the Tarahumari Indian is, I think, a little above the average height of the North American Indians. They are well-built, with clean-cut muscles, while their skin is of the darkest hue of any Indian I have ever seen, being almost a mixture of the darkest Guinea negro with the severe copper-colored aborigine that we are so accustomed to see in the Western parts of the United States.

In their faces they generally have pleasing expressions, and their women are not bad looking for Indians, although the older women break rapidly in appearance, being about 30 to 35 years, as near as I could judge their ages. The savage branch of the Tarahumaris are, of course, the more interesting, as the most nearly representing our own Indians of ten, twenty and thirty years ago, while the civilized are not unlike those we have cultivating the soil around the agencies; although those of Mexico have no Government aid, I believe, such as we so often and so lavishly pour into the laps of our copper-colored brethren of the North.

The savage Tarahumari lives generally off all lines of communication, shunning even the mountain mule trails if they can. His abode is a cave in the mountain side or under the curving interior of some huge cowlder on the ground.

The Sierra Madres are extremely picturesque in their wild mountains, giving thousands of shapes I have never seen elsewhere; battlements, towers, turrets, bastions, buttresses, and flying buttresses, great arches and architraves, while one rock may be caused to a saddle can be made out in the many projecting forms.

It is natural that in such formations, and in the bleeding of limestone formations pierced by more recent upheavals of eruption rock, that many caves should be found, and in one of the huge, irregular granitic and gneissoid bowlders left on the ground by the dissolving away of the softer limestone should often lie so that their contravities could be taken advantage of by these burrowing savages. I give a picture of both by Mr. Landson.

The cliff-dwellers on the Bacachic River had taken a huge cave in the bowlder where they could overlook the picturesque stream, and had walled up its outward face almost to the top, leaving the latter for ventilation probably, as rain could not beat in over the crest of the bulging cliff. It had but one door, closed by an old filthy goathide, into which the inhabitant had to crawl, like the Eskimo into their igloos, or snow-huts, rather than any other form of entrance I can liken it to. The only person we saw was a "wild man of the Sierras," we, with bow and arrow in his hand, was skulking along the big bowlders near the foot of the cliff. A dozen determined men inside ought to have kept away an army corps not furnished with artillery, although I doubt if the occupants had these caves on account of their defensive qualities, but rather for their security from the inroads of the Danels family, as awful nice folks, I do not think, but his daughter went to the other church. Mr. Danels was pretty well up in years, an gray as a rat, but he was upright, and fleet, and had quite a property.

I mustent forget to speak of the Patterson. The lived down on Main St. toed the river, an had a lively garden, tho it was late for it. An sech a lot of flowers, Mr. Patterson's sister Thena had lock with em. I guss tha jest kind a Presbyterian, but alsie tha cum into the Methodist church. We thawt a good deal of all the family, an I guess we all kind a thought tha liked us. Tha wuz a nice house, tho it was—evry tedy went in wen a good time.

Then there was the Waverses, a youngish couple, Baptists, or rutlier, I mean they, tho tha still smoke, lied em an then tha turned to the Methodist Church.

Cale Waverses wasent a bad sort of a man, but he was allus tryin to set things tho he wasent quite bright enuf to trouble himself. His wife was a pretty woman, as a general thing, but she was too much like Cale. More anon. JUNIPER BERRY.

Hills and Dales on the Ocean.

We have all been taught to believe that the ocean, after allowing for false waves and wind waves, has a level surface; that there are no hills and valleys on the waters. M. Bouquet de la Grye has disputed this; has, in fact, demonstrated its fallacy. If we take a U-shaped tube with distilled water of equal temperature on both sides, the two surfaces will be perfectly level; but if one side contains a liquid that is denser than the other, a column of the lighter liquid is required to balance the heavier, and therefore the lighter will stand at a higher level. If fresh water is on one side and salt on the other, equilibrium can only be established by the fresh water standing a little higher than the salt. The like must happen if we have a uniform liquid, as regards composition, but of unequal temperature. Such variations occur in the oceans. Where rivers are pouring a large quantities of fresh water into the sea, and where icebergs are rapidly melting, the salinity is proportionately lower than the other parts. The temperature also varies, and, therefore, an equilibrium can only be attained by variations of level; the lighter water must stand higher than the denser, whether the difference be due to temperature or salinity. Thus in crossing the warm Gulf Stream, a ship sails up-hill on entering, proceeds thus to some distance on the ridge, and then descends. In this respect it resembles a flowing river, which is imbarly crested toward the middle of the stream; it is also like a river in being higher at its source than at its embouchure, as its temperature gradually declines in the course of its northward progress.

TRUTH IN DEATH.

But He Regretted It, and Added a Falsehood at Least.

We had a man named Burrows in our mining camp, and he was without doubt the most notorious liar Nevada will ever shelter. His fame as a liar spread for a hundred miles around, a fact men used to stop at our camp to get a look at him. He wasn't a wicked man, and he had no malice about him, but he was a natural born liar. He lied about his father, his mother, his wife, brothers sisters, and everybody else.

Burrows was taken down sick, and a new falsehood. He had a claim of his own and was fairly industrious, and so we had no excuse to allow him out although his lies were continually kicking up ill-feeling among the men. One day, a lot of earth and rock caved in on him and inflicted fatal injuries, and a number of us knocked off work to be with him in his last moments. You would have thought the shadow of death would have brought a change of sentiment, but it did not. Lying there with only an hour or two of life left to him, he told us that he had been a pirate on the Pacific and where he had buried a large amount of plunder. We all knew that he was from Maine, and had never seen any ocean; but he stuck to it. One of the men finally felt it his duty to say:

"Burrows, you have only a short time to live. You had best spend that in preparing for eternity."

"I've allus been good," he quietly replied.

"Yes, but you are an awful liar, you know."

"Yes, I suppose so so. I've told a million of them, haven't I?"

"No matter now."

"And every one has been laid up against me?"

"Very likely."

"And my chance is rather slim?"

"Rather."

"Well, boys, it's my way, and I can't change at this late day. I set as that cave in cuns I struck a nugget as big as my head. It would value up a clean $15,000. If you'll take it and go around to pull it out and sell it and send the cash to my wife I'll die feeling better."

He went off soon after that, and we said to each other that he had given us the greatest yarn of all. No one took his claim, which was accounted a poor one, and it lay for three months before one of the boys dug into it one day for the pickaxe he had carried for a pick, hadn't got the pick when he came across a lump of gold which balanced $13,280 in coin, and every shilling of the money was sent on to the widow, as directed. It got there in four weeks, no widow, but six months later went to a sister. But, you know, I suppose I told the truth about his find, but, alas! he repented of it, and lied about having a wife.

The Wife's Flower Garden.

Is there more painful sight in the world than a man of sedentary habits trying to do a little work in his flower garden in the springtime? She commonly sits at an upper window and gives him directions, but he knows that she attract the attention of all the neighbors. First, he digs a little in the marked out, and the poor man, before he has satisfied his wife, has been called "stupid" and "dull" until he really thinks he is half-witted until he reflects that he made a fool of himself on July wheat in the morning. Then comes the spading. The poor unhappy man, whose energetic exertion has been boarding a horse-car, begins the fearful task of loosening the earth. The sweat breaks on his forehead, his hands puff up and blister, his joints crack like pistol shots. His back aches frightfully. Then come the hoeing and the raking. An American will groaning protest, not daring to rebel under the watchful eye of his wife.

"Hanner," he pleads, as the stars come out and the dew begins to fall, "ain't this about fur enough?"

Hanner looks contemptuously at him.

"Why, my brother Jacob would be glad to do this work for me instead of paying over it! He'd do it a great deal better than you've done it, too. No; you've not done half enough. I want plenty of time before dark to plant those seeds I brought home. You get the watering-pot and I'll get the seeds. If brother Jacob was only here he would do it himself, but I suppose I must come down and break my back it I'm to have any flowers this year. Brother Jacob would show some taste about arranging the beds, but—"

"Why'n thunder didn't you send for your brother Jacob, then?" snaps the irritated spouse. "Nobody'd be glad den'd be to see your brother Jacob pottering over this darned garden."

And by the time the garden is finished one might imagine from the conversation between the worthy couple that Cadmus had passed by and sown dragons' teeth in the beds.—Buffalo Courier.

Goethe and His Doppelgenger.

Goethe, when a young man, was resting by the roadside on an occasion when he observed the figure of a middle-aged gentleman approaching him on horseback. There was something in the stature and general appearance of the stranger which attracted his attention in a marked degree, for the face and figure seemed to be his own, although much older and more developed. In their costume, however, there was no similarity whatever, for while the stranger wore the robes of a counselor of state, the young poet wore the ordinary dress of civil life. In the course of years afterward when the circumstances had been nearly forgotten it was brought before him again in the most startling manner, for one day while passing the very spot where he had long since encountered the stranger, he found himself suddenly mounted and riding along leisurely and perceived that in form and feature he was now the very counterpart of the mysterious horseman and, to crown the miracle, that his costume was the same to the minutest detail, as he was himself now a counselor of state also.—Belford's Magazine.

"Pize the Bitter."

Gall, known among the Dakota Indians as "Pize the Bitter," is a noted chief of that tribe. He was for the past eighteen or twenty years the right bower to Sitting Bull, whose exploits and atrocities are known to all. About the year 1866, when the execution of Fort Stevenson was begun on the Upper Missouri, the soldiers stationed at that point were one day attacked by the Sioux or Dakotas, and after a sharp skirmish succeeded in repulsing the enemy. The method of attack and the conduct of the Indians led the commanding officer to believe that Gall was in charge. He therefore offered $100 to the man who would bring in his head. Stimulated by such a reward, some of the soldiers searched among the dead for the celebrated chief, but owing to the rapidly fading twilight the faces of the slain and wounded were not distinguishable. Two of the soldiers were passing through the skirmish line with a wagon, and finally retired to the camp with the dead. Among those wounded in the skirmish was Gall, who waited for the night to come, hoping to steal away under its protecting shadows. On the approach of the dark mantle he fainted death. He received two bayonet thrusts, one clear through his chest.

After 48 hours he managed to crawl away to the camp of his people, where he lingered for days, but recovered and continued his hostility against the whites with increased vigor and cruelty. On one occasion, in 1873, he called upon the Indian agent at Standing Rock Agency, and inquired why the Government persisted in retaining troops in his country. The agent asked him in return why he continued his hostility, whereupon Gall throwing off his blanket got up and stood in the greatest yarn of all. No one took his claim, which was accounted a poor one, and it lay for three months before one of the boys dug into it one day for the pickaxe he had carried for a pick, hadn't got the pick when he came across a lump of gold which balanced $13,280 in coin, and every shilling of the money was sent on to the widow, as directed. Cleaning Clothes.

It is a mystery to many people how the scourers of old clothes can make them almost as good as new. Take, for instance, a shiny old coat, vest, or pair of pants of broadcloth, cassimere, or worsted. The scourer takes a strong, warm soapsuds, and plunges the garment into it, scrubs it up and down, rubs the dirty places, if necessary, on a board, and then soaps, and then rinses through several waters and hangs it to dry on the line. In a nearly dry he takes it in, rolls it up for an hour or two, and by pressure and friction cloth is laid on the outside of the coat and the iron passed over it, and lo! the wrinkles are out; but the iron is removed before the steam ceases to rise from the goods else they would be shiny. Wrinkles that are obstinate are removed by laying a wet cloth over them and touching the iron over that. If any shiny places are left, they are rubbed with sandpaper; the iron is lifted, while the full cloud of steam arises and brings the nap up with it. Cloth should always have a suds made specially for it, as if that which has been used for white cotton or woolen cloths, lint will be left in the water and cling to the cloth. In this manner we have known the same coat and pantaloons to be renewed time and again, and have all the look and feel of new garments. Good broadcloth and fine cassimere last long under many washings, and look better every time because of them.—American Analyst.

What Becomes of the Rice.

Niagara Grocerymen (to new customer)—Two pounds of rice, did you say?

Customer—Yes, that will do.

Grocerymen—Are you in a great hurry, sir?

Customer—No, not in any special hurry, why?

Grocerymen—Well, you see, the fact is, I'm just out of rice; but if you will sit down for a few moments, I will go over to the Clifton House—that hotel over there—and get a few pounds.

Customer—All right, go ahead; but hurry, please. Er—by the way, isn't that rather a strange place to go to lay in a stock of rice?

Grocerymen—Oh, not at all. The grocers of this place get all their rice at the hotels.

Customer—How does that happen?

Grocerymen—Why, you see, nine couples out of ten, who get married, take a trip to the Falls on their wedding tour, and when they disrobe at night they have from a handful to a quart of rice on the floor of their room. The chambermaid gathers it up in the morning, and dumps it into a special bin in the basement, where it is left to accumulate until it is generally sold to the grocers.—Peck's Sun.

Three Rebellions a Day.

Three rebellions, obstinate, though bloodless, occur in the estate of the dyspeptic who partakes of food thrice a day. Simply when the wonderful of the great invigorant and appetizer, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, before each meal and Only before retiring. Nervousness and insomnia, always induced by chronic dyspepsia, disappear with the use of this invigorant. Constipation, and constipation and biliousness, are also overcome by this regulator. Not only will the system acquire strength, but also regularity of action, which insures assimilation of the food. Malaria, kidney complaint, and kidney weakness and nervous yield to the Bitters.

Discount.

It used to be the custom, and is now in many localities, to "beat down" the price of the goods of retail merchants. An amusing example of this practice is given by a writer:

In the old haggling way of trade it was customary to demand a great deal more than the article was worth. One time, on the Texas frontier, a man came into camp riding on an old nag.

"How much for the mule?" asked a bystander.

"Only a hundred dollars," answered the rider.

"I'll give you five dollars," said the other.

The rider stopped short, as if in amazement, and slowly dismounted.

"Stranger," said he, "I ain't agoing to fix a little matter of ninety-five dollars stand between me and a mule trade. Take the critter."

Another story, somewhat of the same sort, is related of an old country farmer who, on entering his rent, told his landlord that he wanted some timber to build a house, and would be much obliged if he would give him permission to cut down what would answer for the purpose.

"Well, the landlord, sharply, "I will give you one enough to build a barn."

"To make a gate, then?"

"Yes."

"That's all I wanted," said the farmer, "and more than I expected."

Arkansas has more than 2,000,000 acres of land, held as forfeited for taxes, internal improvements, lands, swamp lands, school and bank lands for sale at nominal prices. The following table will enable the reader to form some idea of the extent and character of the lands in the State and the practicability to the several industries:

Four Great Conquerors.

The four greatest conquerors in the history of the world are Alexander, Hannibal, Cæsar, and Bonaparte. Alexander died in a scene of debauch, after weeping that there were no other worlds to conquer. Hannibal, having defeated the Roman armies, and making the foundations of that powerful empire quake, after his return to his own country was made to fly, and died at last by poison administered by his own hand. Cæsar, after having conquered 800 cities, and putting to death millions of his foes, after pursuing to death the only rival he had on earth, was assassinated by those he considered his nearest friends. Bonaparte, whose mandates kings obeyed, after having deluged Europe in blood, closed his days in lonely banishment.

"Why! what in the world do people want of burrs?"

JULY 16—Green peas are on the bill-of-fare.

Butter, 15 c., eggs are 15 c., old potatoes are 35 c.

Crops are growing finely.

Henry Cooper, of Charlevoix, was in town last week.

Mrs. Evans, at Ironton, was very sick last week. Dr. Foster attended.

Sylvester Newson returned home from Burgess last Thursday, where he has been rolling logs with the Pine Lake Lumber Co.'s crew.

The scow Maggie Avery, en route from Boyne City to Charlevoix with a load of brick for Charlevoix's new school-house, was obliged to run in to Bedwin's dock one day last week, and lay over night on account of a severe wind storm, as she was loaded down to the deck.

Samuel Currey, who has been stopping the past year with his brother Alex, accompanied by Jas. Dunlop, left last Thursday for Garnsville, New York.

Hay cutting has commenced, and as far as we can learn the crop is reported very good, notwithstanding the constant rain the forepart of the season.

The mail route between Charlevoix and East Jordan was changed last week. The mail from outside via East Jordan, reaches Ironton in the forenoon instead of afternoon as heretofore.

The ladies of the Congregational church will give an ice cream social on Friday evening of this week. All invited.

Thomas Walker, of Banks, Antrim county, was in town last week selling a salve. Mr. Walker was among the first settlers of Evelyn township, now owned by Mr. Malosh in this place being his old homestead.

D. N. Gregory found his drowned horse one day last week on the beach near B. H. Whitman's place across Pine lake. The harness was missing.

The grain louse, so destructive to wheat in southern Michigan, has reached this county, or at least this portion of the county. During the past two weeks we have visited several pieces of wheat and find that the insect is doing a great deal of damage. J. V. Lane reports that he has a field of wheat that will be an almost total failure, caused by this insect. It seems that the insect does its mischief at the root of the kernel, causing the head to wither up. We not only find it on wheat, but it may be found on the oat leaf apparently waiting for the oats to head out. The old insect is very brown and dies immediately after raising its young.

Advance.

JULY 16—Preaching at the school house last Sunday night by Rev. Mr. Aldrich.

Miss Jessie Davis spent the Fourth with her brother at Mancelona and returned home a few days ago accompanied by Miss Clara Henderson of that place.

Miss Josie McShea went to Undine last Saturday to visit Miss Addie Lewis.

The select school of this village is in a flourishing condition. Miss Josie McShea and Miss Samantha Willis are the teachers. We understand there is a large attendance, and the scholars are very much interested in their studies.

Farmers are hard at work this week securing their hay crop, which is better than it was last year.

Last Thursday night three blos soms of a night blooming cereus, belonging to Mrs. A. B. Stone, unfolded their beautiful petals to the admiring gaze of many lovers of the beautiful. They were beauties.

Your correspondent took a tramp through the county one day last week, and nowhere did we see better crops than right here on the peninsula formed by the two arms of Pine lake.

Mr. Cole, formerly of this place, is in this part of the country again. He says that the wheat midge is doing lots of damage in the southern part of the state.

Now in regard to that young man from Wilson "who visits quite often in Advance," according to the Wilson scribe: Our remarks were about falling for front. O la! we didn't think of anything else.

Burgess.

JULY 17—Haying hands are in good demand.

Several of the Indians leave this week for Kalkaska to pick huckleberries.

Mrs. Frank Kane spent the past week in Charlevoix.

Married, by W. B. Sayers, last Friday, Ernest Wise and Jennie Harris. The happy couple got a grand send off, very much to the justice for marrying them.

Mrs. Kane, of Flint, arrives today to spend the rest of the summer with her sons, Frank and Peter Kane.

Mrs. Leroy Hamlin, of Charlevoix, is visiting her parents this week.

Mr. Peter Long and Mr. Samuel Long and wife, of Bay, and Mr. Amos Stauffer and wife, of Carpenter, were visiting at Peter Kane's last Sunday.

Several Harvestes are going to attend the camp-meeting at Bay View next Sunday.

W. J. McGeagh is in Chicago on business connected with his handle factory.

Rev. Mr. Whitman has many friends here who desire his return next conference year

Louis Deline has sent in his resignation as postmaster of Ellsworth.

My friends, next time you visit the lake, let the green gooseberries alone.

Atwood.

JULY 15.—There are three new improved Chesbrough mowers in the neighborhood and they give satisfaction to the owners. Hay is proving a fair crop, and stories of big loads are afloat.

The band boys were out in force Saturday night and discoursed sweet strains of music from their band stand. They will continue to do so for the rest of the season.

Here's a Democrat for You.

The following document has been received at Washington from the postmaster at Mount Carmel, Ill.

MOUNT CARMEL, June 7, 1889.

To the Hon. President, &c.

By the grace of God and Grover Cleveland I am postmaster at Mount Carmel. My official term will expire Jan. 20, 1890. In addition to editing the mails of this city I am also the editor of the Mount Carmel Register, a live local democratic newspaper, established in 1889, and published at $1.25 a year, cash in advance; a discount of twenty per cent to ministers and presidents.

While the office has agreed with me, and I have in the main agreed with the office, and while I might reasonably entertain the hope of holding on for eight months longer, yet I feel it my duty to tender you my resignation.

Being a democrat, I have preached that "to the victor belongs the spoils." I feel disposed to practice what I preach.

Your immediate predecessor hoped to build up his party by keeping the opposition in office. You are probably aware, if you are a Mason, that with the vocabulary of true and trite sayings, that his name is now Demos.

I am moved further to tender my resignation because of the death of a thousand of my faithful patriots to succeed me. I believe that the tariff is a tax. They do not. Therefore they are of your kith and kindred, and he who provides not for his own knows not the faith and is worse than an infidel. I am told that you are not built that way.

But to resume the thread of my discourse: The boys who are succeeding me are of your political kinship; they have been feeding on shucks and icicles for four long weary years; the official calf is fat and they yearn to taste its tender joints. They fought (among themselves) like (at the nose,) and are willing to die for the g. o. p. When I asserted that you were the Chief Magistrate of a nation of rat-tail soup with chopsticks, they swore by Dudley and Foster that it was a conjugal calumny, and threatened to depign canard, and threatened to cut tail blocks of five by five the fat out of me. Fortunately for me their throats were hoarse from their exertion. They carried torches, drunk with the cocoa, sang "Grandpa's hat will just fit Benny," and divers and many foolish things, none of which would they have been guilty of doing had they not seemed the aroma of patchouli on the breath morning air And the peans of praise which they sounded when it became evident that the pay-roll was gone there, Eli," will ever be a Sahara in my memory.

For these and other reasons, unnecessary to mention, I tender you my resignation, with the hope that it will not be animated by a similar spirit in 1893. If he is, your democratic successor will be spared the painful necessity of "turning the rascal out." I am respectfully yours,

ELAS W. HAYES, P. M.

N. B.—I would rather be right than be postmaster.

DOWN AN EMBANKMENT.

Fifteen Persons Injured in an Accident on the Flint and Pere Marquette.

A Cairo & Vicksburg passenger train on the big four road met with the most complete demolition two miles south of Mount Carmel, Ill., twelve to fifteen passengers being seriously injured. The passenger train was rushing along at about thirty-five miles an hour and was composed of a freight car loaded with fruit, a baggage-car, and two passenger coaches. The freight jumped the track and threw the remainder of the train down a ten-foot embankment. The passengers were badly shaken up and bruised. For some time it was impossible to do anything toward rescuing the passengers, as nearly all were more or less injured and badly frightened, but the coaches were finally broken open with axes and the injured removed.

Dr. McGlynn, it is said, will also call for Rome soon after the Archbishop's departure to make his defense in connection with the controversy which led to his dismissal as pastor of St. Stephen's Church and his excommunication by the Holy See.

TRAFFIC AND COMMERCE.

A Commercial Agency Finds Encouragement in the situation.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

Substantially, all the news this week has been favorable to the future prospects. The official crop report was not only an assurance of large yield but evidence that the reported injuries to wheat, cotton, and corn had not been as serious as feared. The reports of business from the west show that volumes have increased, where there has been most complaint, and the latest accounts are more satisfactory than usual. At Chicago banks have been so far prudent, and the outlook is probably considered favorable for a good year. Future trade brokers are circulating very freely, and the general opinion is that, though prices may change, though some signs of danger are discoverable. The great strike at the Chicago mills, accompanied with violence at the outset, has ended in a complete discomfiture of the industry. Wool is unchanged in price at eastern markets, but the demand for manufactures of worsteds, which are being made only for immediate necessities and functions, is very far from begins to be other. Cotton is weakening among Ohio holders is reported. Wheat has been very strong, though strengthened by favorable accounts of acreage, thus between national managers, who appear to be settling the difficulties as to Pacific pools, and to have made some progress toward a division of business. The business failures for the week of eighty from New York show an increase of 20 per cent. over last year, and the weekly reports of speculation in stocks also a favorable sign as to the monetary future. The exports of specie during the last seven days were 420 against 20 the week previous. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 130.

NEW RAILWAY MILEAGE.

What Has Been Done in the First Six Months of 1889.

The Railway Age reports from thirty-one States and Territories for the past six months show that the aggregate of new railway construction is 1,323 miles, distributed over 123 different lines. Of this amount more than half is credited to ten Southern States. As an immense amount of new railway mileage has been planned and the outlook seems a very favorable opportunity for raising the necessary money. Much more would be built this year than is now possible but for the alarm which was raised in financial circles just as everything should be overdone, and which caused a reaction that is now delaying the completion of many meritorious and needed enterprises. The estimate of new construction for the year is put at 5,000 to 6,000 miles, as against a total of 7,189 miles in 1888. Nearly all of the construction of this season is in the form of extensions of old lines, which are being added as the demands of business call for them.

DEATH OF EX-CONGRESSMAN RICE.

The Minnesota Pioneer Politician Passes Away Near St. Paul.

Edmund Rice, ex-Representative in Congress from the Fourth Minnesota District, died at White Bear, Minn., near St. Paul, of brain trouble. He leaves a wife and several children, the latter being residents of Tacoma, W. T. Mr. Rice settled at Stillwater in 1838. In 1847 he enlisted to serve in the Mexican war from Minnesota. He first united his fortunes with those of St. Paul in 1849, and followed the practice of law up to the year 1856, when he began the life of a railroad man. His best energies were spent in the furtherance of the interests of the St. Paul and Chicago Road. He was a member of the Territorial Legislature in 1854, in 1867, 1872, 1877, and 1878 he was in the Legislature, and in 1876 in the State Senate. In 1887 he was elected to the Fiftieth Congress from the Fourth Congressional District of Minnesota. At the last election he was defeated for re-election.

SIX THOUSAND PERSONS DROWNED.

A Terrible Flood in China Caused by the Bursting of a Waterspout.

The steamer City of New York, arrived in San Francisco, brings the following: The Japan Gazette of the 5th ult. says that intelligence has been received at Hong Kong from the Kiaying Chun Prefecture, in the northeast of Kwangtung, that early on the morning of June 2 the Chan Ping and Ting Yuen districts were flooded by the bursting of a waterspout or tornado, described by the Chinese as a waterspouts, and the level country was flooded with nearly thirty-six feet of water. The villages of Chan Kou and Ha Kui Hui, in the Ping Yuen district, and Cusong Tan, Hop Lui, Squi Ka, San Chan Kin, and Fan Po Hui, in the Chan Ping district, were overflowed, many houses being wholly swept away, while others were inundated. Upward of 6,000 lives were lost.

CARNEGIE'S MEN AT WORK.

A Compromise Adopted Settling Matters for Three Years.

Pittsburg (Pa.) dispatch: The strike at the Homestead steel plant of Carnegie, Phipps & Co. has been definitely settled. The terms of the settlement are not positively known, but it is understood that concessions were made on both sides. The workmen, it is said, have agreed to accept 20 per cent. reduction instead of 30 per cent. as proposed by the firm. The scale will remain in force for three years, ending in 1892, and instead of the scale year beginning with January, as proposed by Carnegie, will commence July 1, the date of the Amalgamated iron scale. Three thousand men are again working, with steady employment promised for three years.

CHARGES AGAINST BOULANGER.

The General Said to Have Been at the Head of a Plot to March Upon the Elysee.

The Paris Temps says that either relevant documents have been discovered which prove that General Boulanger was at the head of a plot to march upon the Elysee palace, and that several officers of high rank had promised him their support. The paper further says that the charges of embezzlement against Boulanger relate to the purchase of camp bedsteads and other supplies for the troops and to malversation of the funds of the War Ministry. Among other charges, it says, the General is accused of using the funds of the War Ministry to pay shares in the Military Club, and of keeping the shares thus bought in his own possession.

FRENCH PARLIAMENT ADJOURNS.

The Sessions of Both Houses Closed Leaving Much Undone.

The French Chamber of Deputies approved a bill granting a credit of 58,000,000 francs for the building of war ships. The Senate adopted the budget in the form in which it was passed by the Chamber. Additional bills were referred to committee. The Chamber of Deputies passed the amnesty bill. President Meline then read a decree closing the session. Fifteen minutes later the Senate received, when Vice President Humbert, who was in the chair, announced that the Chamber, having decreed the close of the session and concurring in the Senate, the latter body was no longer competent to deliberate, and intimated that, therefore, a decree was read closing the session.

WILL FURNISH QUOTATIONS.

The Chicago Board of Trade Beaten by the Bucket-Shops.

In the long and bitter fight between the Chicago Board of Trade and the bucket-shops about the market quotations, the Board has backed down, at least for the time being, and the following resolution has been adopted:

Resolved, That the market quotations without the approval of May 1, 1889, be restored under the application and agreements under which they were granted, and that the Board of Trade proceed in said applications and agreements contained, and that the resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of the 22d of July last relative to market quotations be repealed, but without prejudice to the rights of parties acting upon or in reliance upon the great injustice sought to be corrected by the market quotations and to broaden the scope of the Board of Trade so as to the placement of its Board of Directors may seem expedient and proper.

THREE PRISONERS BURNED UP.

Horrible Fate of the Inmates of the Jail at Jacksonville, Oregon.

At Jacksonville, Oregon, the jail, containing three prisoners, caught fire. Before the engine could be reached three prisoners had suffocated. The fire originated in the kitchen adjoining the jail, and the upper story, which made it impossible to reach the prisoners until the fire was extinguished. The origin of the fire is the cause of conjecture. The prisoners were: Newton Cook, a negro, and Sullivan Arnold, with the initials "W. L." on his arm, age 56 whose name is Frank Hoover, married, family in Michigan, brewery discharged Union soldier; Frank Warner, age 19, native of Germany.

WANT TO RENEW THE LEASE.

Enormous Price Offered by the Cattlemen for the Cherokee Strip.

The Kansas City Times prints the statement that the Cherokee Cattle Association, the present lessee of the Cherokee Strip, will make a proposition to the next Cherokee Council to extend its lease for ten years beyond its termination. The present lease has five more years to run. The company offers to pay in all $5,000,000 for the use of the strip for the ten years, saying at the rate of $500,000 per annum for the first five years and $750,000 per annum for the second five years. The total would be almost as much as the Government offers to pay the Indians for an outright sale of the land.

ROLLANGER'S TRIAL.

The General Summoned to Answer a Serious Indictment.

A copy of the indictment found against Gen. Boulanger has been formally delivered at his residence at Paris. Gen. Boulanger, M. Rochefort, and Count Dillon are summoned to appear within ten days. If they do not appear within twenty days they will be declared outlaws and their property will be confiscated. The trial has been fixed for Aug. 30. The judgment will be final, no appeal being allowed. The indictment charges the accused with instigating the issue of a manifesto against the Government in July, 1887, at Lyons and Paris, and in December, 1887, in Paris.

BIG BLAZE AT FRESNO, CAL.

A California City Narrowly Escapes Destruction.

At Fresno, Cal., fire broke out in the bakery of Weimar & Leban. The building was so inflammable that the fire spread with great rapidity, and though an alarm was promptly sounded the whole building was in flames before the firemen arrived. At one time it seemed as if the whole business part of the city would be destroyed. The heaviest losers are J. D. Tink Builders, $20,000; Levinson & Co., dry goods, $30,000, insurance, $12,000; Dunlavy's saloon, $15,000, half insured; Stevens & Co., dry goods, $20,000, insurance, $2,000.

DIXON STAYS IN JAIL.

His Indictment Considered Prima Facie Evidence of Guilt.

John F. Dixon is still in jail in Chicago, and there is a strong probability that he will remain there until final judgment is rendered on the charge of murder that stands against his name. Judge Horton denied Boggs' second petition for a writ of habeas corpus on the broad ground that the indictment returned by the grand jury was prima facie evidence of guilt. He also said he could not review the action of the jury because its finding was based on the testimony of sworn witnesses.

PUNCETON, OHIO, WRECKED.

No further particulars yet obtainable.

Mr. E. D. Wheeler, of Manistee, Michigan of the Salt Manufacturers' Association of the West, states that the salt trust is to be organized with a capital of $20,000,000 under the laws of New York State. A system of apportionment has been adopted to prevent ruinous competition among competing salt-producing territories. Mr. Burt, who ran for Governor of Michigan, will be the first President of the trust. English capitalists have take $5,000,000 worth of stock.

In the latter years of his life Mr. Cole devoted himself to agriculture.

The joint committee of the Eastern and Western railroads, including the New England lines, have decided that on and after July 22 the 25-cent per 100 pounds tariff on corn for 24 hours will be restored on all shipments of grain and its products except plain corn. This might be shipped after July 15 on the 20-cent basis.

Amnesty to Chicago.

Judge Prendergast, of the Cook County (Ill.) County Court, having certified to the result of the recent election, which terminated in favor of annexation of her suburbs to Chicago, Mayor Cregier issued the requisite proclamation declaring Hyde Park, the town of Lake, Lake View, Cicero, and Jefferson annexed to the city of Chicago, and formal possession was taken of the annexed territory.

Havoc by Texas Fever.

Cattlemen from the Cherokee strip report that Texas fever is piling horses and cattle there. Forty head were seen dead in one patch, and in others from seven to twenty-five carcasses were lying around. Thousands of cattle, they say, are dying in Oklahoma, and they predict that not a hoof will be taken from there to the north for some months.

Rich and Jamieson Arrested.

MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS.

EVENTS AND INCIDENTS THAT HAVE LATELY OCCURRED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Wooings and Doubts—Crimes, Casualties, and General News Notes.

—Work has begun on the East Saginaw Club House. It is to cost $25,000.

—A meeting of parties interested in the construction of the proposed Lansing and Northern Railroad was held at Lansing last week and an organization effected. Money was pledged to make the preliminary survey and the work will be instituted at once. The southern terminus of the road will be at Lansing. Northward, the proposed line will pass through St. Johns and Maple Rapids; thence north and west to a terminus on the lake at some point not yet determined.

—Detroit Free Press: The directors of the Detroit Crematory will hereafter exclude all persons from the furnace room during funeral services at the chapel, and none but the bereaved friends will be allowed to attend the incineration without a special permit. Another new regulation is that requesting that a friend of the family of the deceased be designated to be present during the entire process of incineration.

—Detroit Journal: Gen. Brown writes a circular to the officers of the Michigan State troops telling them not to take the back shop of their flocks to camp this year.

—E. Zimmer's furniture factory at East Saginaw was damaged $2,300 by fire.

—John Maywod is postmaster and editor at Bad Axe and is also a Methodist preacher.

—The Michigan State Holiness Association will hold its State campmeeting six miles north of Corunna, commencing Aug. 1 and lasting one week.

—Detroit Journal: Last fall a Canadian mail poach, which is made up at the Canadian "soo," was lost, and since then, almost every method of accounting for it has been tried, and many broad hints of official dishonesty uttered. Recently it was found in the woods near the Soo junction, where it had evidently been stolen from the train and cut open and robbed. The contents amounted $1,017 in registered packages, $524 of which was Canadian customs dues. The thieves got it all but $417, which was overlooked, and which was reduced almost to pulp when found.

—Burglars robbed a clothing store at Corunna, were picked up as tramps by the night watchman, spotted their revolvers for security, for lodging at a hotel, and then the watchman was conducting the negotiations they fled. Two fellows supposed to be the burglars were afterwards caught.

—Luther Lance: At Snyder went under the gang saw to oil the machinery, when it stared up and he was pinned to the floor, where it sawed off his legs and worked they struck him in the stomach. Finally he was caught by his clothing in the quarter of a revolving shaft and whirled around. Several ribs were torn loose, and a blood vessel broke, filling his lung with blood. He remained close to deck when the timber from above came down, killing him instantly.

—Mr. Lyman Gibson's youth named Hagerman, aged 17 years, while felling a tree was struck by the tree and fatally injured.

—The monthly crop report, issued from the State Department at Lansing, shows that corn has celebrated the Champe-de-Mars, where the Exposition now holds its annual fête, in 1780, and that all Federalists were hanged on the first classes, high and low, of the "Altar of Country." The French, therefore, have adopted it. The strength, distinctness, as the running points in their history, and the holidays of the Republic for twelve years past of the day has been kept in a manner worthy of the occasion. Indianapolis.

The Day Celebrated in France.

The one hundredth anniversary of the fall of the Bastile was appropriately celebrated by the French people on Thursday. The exercises were held under the auspices of the Cercle Francais, the representative of French organizations in the city. Monsieur, the French Consul, was the speaker of the day. He spoke in French, and commenced with a reference to the fall of the Bastile. He said the people of France did not annually celebrate the event simply to commemorate the raising to the ground of the old political prison, but because the fall of the Bastile symbolized the triumph of free ideas, and the triumph of the Republic. It was in the institution of liberty they gloried, and not in the destruction of a few stones, bricks, and iron in the Bastile tower.

"The people in every hamlet in France celebrated thereupon seized him, but the crowd came to Dorouleede's rescue and took the prisoner from the officer. Clemenceau was roughly handled by the mob, when a large body of police suddenly appeared upon the scene and charged the crowd, driving them in all directions and rescuing the unfortunate counsellor. A large number of persons were arrested. Lagierre and Dorouleede were taken to the station and fined 100 francs each and were given to the office of Le Presse, where they met and indulged in mutual congratulations. The police cleared the streets and kept a considerable number of the disorderly people in custody throughout the city, and dangerous developments were feared.

The Day Celebrated in France.

The one hundredth anniversary of the fall of the Bastile was celebrated by the public meetings and fetes in Paris and throughout the country, according to the dispatch from the French capital. Tricolors were displayed everywhere and national Boulanger were displayed in the windows of the Journal of Boulanger and other Boulanger reports. These devices called forth a few outrages from passers-by, but with the exception of the disorders in the Place de la Concorde and at the office of le Presse the day passed off without serious incidents. The troops were kept in the background, and the fêtes held at Longchamps, Vincennes, and elsewhere were attended by the great crowds that gathered to witness the review of the troops. A band of the people assembled at the Bon Ada Cafe, on the Place de la Concorde, and there proceeded to be hooted. An Italian flag was displayed, which was carried by a crowd that tried to tear it to pieces and set it on fire. The Italians were protected by a mounted detachment of Gardes de Paris, who charged the crowd and rescued the flag

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

THE JOURNAL ENLARGED.

The JOURNAL goes to its readers this week enlarged by the addition of one column to each page, and a proportionate increase in the length of columns. This enlargement is necessary to properly accommodate advertisers without curtailing local news matter

The change necessitates printing twice, and the closing of the outside pages earlier in the week than formerly, and therefore disarranges our style of make-up, but we hope to settle down to something satisfactory in a few weeks. Our county news department, which is an important and valuable feature of the JOURNAL, will this week be found on this (fourth) page, and may possibly be continued there, while the political matter will as much as possible, be put on the first page.

If each subscriber will call the attention of his neighbor to this feature of the JOURNAL, and ask him to send in his name and $1.50, our list will soon assume very respectable proportions, and we shall be enabled to make still further improvements.

Give the JOURNAL a boom.

REVENUE collector Geo. N. Davis, of Grand Rapids, retires from office to-day; also his deputy, G. M. Taber. Clerk J. B. Smith is to be promoted to deputy. John Stoketee is the new collector.

THE knot-sawyers of the Muskegon shingle and lumber company struck Monday for an increase from $1.75 to $2.00 per day, and when they refused to permit non-union men to work for the former price, the mill shut down and promises not to start up again for sixty days. The workmen will undoubtedly suffer more than the company.

THE North American Salt Company, with a capital stock of eleven million dollars, has been incorporated under the laws of the state of New York. W. R. Burt of Saginaw, is president, and John Canfield salt manufacturer, of Manistee is one of the directors. The projectors of the corporation have contracted for the purchase of nearly all of the salt manufactories on the American continent, and notwithstanding the fine promises of their prospectus, they will undoubtedly run the salt business so as to guarantee a good profit, and the consumers of salt, the "dear people" will foot the bills. If salt does not immediately show a rise in price we shall be surprised.

IF does not matter that Mr. W. R. Burt is a democrat, or that he represented the democratic party at the head of the Michigan state ticket last year. He is now at the head of the salt trust, one of the boldest, shrewdest, farthest-reaching schemes of organized monopoly in existence. It is a corporation that levies tribute from every man, woman and child in America; a corporation that not only thrusts its clutches into the pockets of every workingman and withdraws another portion of his hard earnings, but helps to fix his wages at a reduced price, his only stock in trade by which he can support his family. Mr. Burt may still profess to be a democrat, but as the head of the salt trust he no longer represents true democracy.

Wealthy Tax Evaders.

Mrs. John Wanamaker, wife of the postmaster general, and her two daughters returned from Europe last Sunday and brought with them thirty-three trunks and forty-five cases, which was entered at the custom house as "personal effects" not to escape taxation. Not long ago, Mr. Wanamaker, himself won a suit against the United States, under a forced construction of the tariff claiming that silk ribbons should not pay the 50 per cent. duty levied upon them but a much lower rate as ball trimmings, thus getting out of the treasury a large sum of money that had already been paid him by his customers; and, still later, since he became postmaster general, he tried to get in a lot of foreign goods at a less tax than the law requires, but the treasury department decided against him. How singular it is that strong protectionists are free traders when it comes to paying custom house taxes themselves. Wealthy people like the Wanamaker family bring in millions of dollars of goods for their personal use every year, but if a poor woman should undertake to bring in a paper of needles or a spool of thread from Canada and should get caught in the wash, she is fined, and all the protectionists would shout, hurrah!

Nearly all of our wealthy European tourists, saints and sinners alike, are notorious smugglers. They will have thousands of dollars worth of garments made abroad, put them on once, sweat they have been worn and get them in free of tax. Now, as these taxes are said to be conducive to prosperity, why should they evade them? Why should Mr. Wanamaker himself try to get back the money he has paid to protect American labor? Why should his wife and two daughters bring in thirty three trunks and forty-five cases crammed with "personal effects" and escape taxation, while if a poor person brings a pair of blankets, as a farmer near Charlotte did a few years ago, they are pounced upon by the government and taxed over 70 per cent? Is there any sort of justice in such things?—Jackson Patriot.

A Gentle Reminder.

When, during the Cleveland administration, it was stated that the contractors to furnish army blankets were purchasing them abroad, what a mighty fuss was made by the republican press. The very air was blue with the fierce denunciations that came from protectionist tongues and pens. But now, with a home market administration in power, a contract has been made for the purchase of five hundred and fifty thousand enameled bricks in England for use in the construction of the congressional library at Washington. Why is this? Gen. Casey who had charge of the work says he bought them in England because they were best and cheapest there. Why should others be refused a chance to get the best and cheapest? As they are to be used by the government they come in free of duty; but if it was wrong to get better and cheaper army blankets in England two or three years ago is it not equally wrong to buy better and cheaper bricks there this year for a public building? Republican ethics seems to be that nothing can be right under a democratic administration, but the same thing under a republican rule is perfectly right. The old church at Alexandria, and the garden wall and out houses at Mount Vernon, were built of bricks brought from England, so that, in the recent purchase for the congressional library, history is repeating itself. As a matter of course what Washington did the Harrison administration has a right to do, but how it looks in view of all the gabble against foreign purchases and free trade that prevailed last year.—Jackson Patriot.

Investigation Not Wanted.

Walthew, the man who was exposed in wholesale bribery of our republican legislature, and who was finally driven out of Lansing by a warrant for his arrest, has been in Windsor all the while, but although the offence is one for which he could be extradited, the authorities made no effort to secure him. The reason was that the republicans did not dare have an exposure of the rottenness at Lansing this winter. Some of the leading republicans in Michigan would have been exposed if an investigation had been made.—Petoskey Democrat.

Money Order Funds.

Since the establishment of the money order system funds to the amount of $1,000,000 have accumulated for which orders were issued, but never presented for payment. The postal authorities are now taking steps to return money not called for to its rightful owners, but over $1,000,000 remains unclaimed.

Kill the Sugar Trust.

A single shot will kill the sugar trust—the monopoly that is robbing every family in the United States. Free sugar is the only remedy. A two-line act of congress will lay the monster out. The fight ought to be just as short, sharp and decisive as that.—Washington Press (high tariff).

Protected Sugar.

Sugar, that sold last year for 6¼ cents per pound, now sells at 5¾ and 9 cents. Query: Who is benefited by the advance in price? The 60 millions of American consumers, or the "trust," known as the 25 sugar refiners, who mostly live in New York city. This is the result of protection.

The Tariff is a Tax.

By reason of the existence of a republican protective tariff, the people of the United States pay $750,000,000 a year in increased prices on home products; or supposing our population to be 65,000,000, the tariff is a tax upon each one from $8 to $10 a year.

More Brains Wanted.

Frank Sutliff, of the state printing office, at Lansing, sizes up the legislature in the following manner: "I am a republican, to be sure, but I must say the late lamented legislature didn't contain brains enough to make a good decent headache."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Eveline.

JULY 22.—Beautiful haying weather.

G. McDonald has just recovered from an attack of pleurisy.

Lon Shelden and family, have moved to Charlevoix, where Lon has a job on the pier.

Wild and tame strawberries are gone. Red raspberries are now ripe and abundant and of good quality, and the women and children can now be seen returning home with loads of the red berries.

A. J. Hall, of Boyne City, was in town Saturday.

Eber Burdick, of East Jordan, was in Eveline Saturday.

In speaking of curiosities we wish to state right here that Joe Tuttle has a field of two acres of wheat that may be called a curiosity. It is fall wheat and is growing finely. Joe informs us that he never sowed it and upon inquiry how wheat could grow without sowing it, he said it was "volunteer." The scatterings were plowed under last fall and not even dragged and notwithstanding this the crop is very even and will yield abundantly.

Alex Currey has the finest piece of fall wheat in this section.

J. Palmer, who had his leg broken about three weeks ago on the wood scow, is still unable to work as yet.

Boswell, the photographer from Boyne City, is now cosily located in Purvis' hall.

The new blacksmith shop at Ironton is now completed and Mr. Hicks has already commenced to work. He is giving good satisfaction. We wish him success.

Peter Tuttle is on the sick list.

The little ten year old daughter of David Staley, cut the thumb of her right hand very badly on Saturday last in a feed cutter while it was being operated by a younger sister. Dr. Foster was called and thinks the thumb will have to taken off.

Miss Sarah Snyder gave a birthday dance on Wednesday evening of last week, at the home of her father. We understand there were about 60 persons present and all had an enjoyable time.

J. H. Backenstone house near Advance, burned to the ground on Sunday morning between nine and ten o'clock. The family of Jason Lewis, who occupied the house at the time, having rented the farm for the summer, left the place a few minutes before the fire broke out, to visit her father in Wilson. A boy named Trudgeon rode with them for a short distance, returned and discovered the fire; he rang the dinner bell but as Mr. Lewis had got out of hearing distance, he knew nothing of the fire until he returned at 7 o'clock in the evening. The family lost all but what they had on them. There was no insurance.

Inwood.

JULY 22.—All our farmers are securing their hay. Many of them have the latest improved labor saving appliances,—horse-mowers, rakes and forks.

Potatoes promise a big crop.

Elder Tracy preached at Hilton school house last Sunday.

O. D. Hilton has visited the town of Banks, and reports the apple crop a total failure.

While in Chicago last week W. J. McGough purchased a shingle machine to put into his saw mill.

Edwin Cook will lift his stumps with dynamite.

Norwood is to have cornet band, Inwood must not be outdone in this matter.

Carrie Hilton has thirty pupils in music.

Wheat, oats, and barley promise a good crop, but corn is not so good.

Red raspberries are plenty.

The Wells boys are preparing to take the lead in threshing this year.

Max Genett is building a brick addition to his residence. The cellar is now finished. Ed Stafford is doing the work.

Geo. O'Brien has sold part of his farm to Mr. Moore, and the latter has built a new house which he will occupy soon.

Mr. Prosser, a man of many years experience in the brick, tile and pottery business, visited Pearl's brick yard, and says he has the best clay for all business in the state.

New horse sheds have been built near the Norwood church.

Advance.

JULY 23.—About 10 o'clock a. m. last Sunday (21st) the Jason Lewis's house with all its contents was burned to the ground. Mr. Jason Lewis and family who occupied the house had just started away to make a visit. They had not been gone five minutes when Mr. Trudgeon's boy who also was just starting away, discovered smoke issuing from the house. He rang the bell to recall Mr. Lewis who evidently did not hear it. He then ran to Mr. Phillip's and gave the alarm. Mr. Phillips was there in less than ten minutes from the time that Mr. Lewis started away but found the whole inside of the house in a mass of flames. He succeeded in breaking in the kitchen door and grabbed some articles of wearing apparel which were hanging by the side of the door, and was then driven back by the flames. Mr. Lewis loses everything that he and his family had excepting the clothes they had on. It is a sad loss to him as he is a poor man, depending on his work for a living. Mr. Backenstose had the most of his household goods at Advance where he is living. We understand that the house cost $800, and was not insured.

Two vessels loaded at Platten's dock last week, one with lumber the other with bark.

Charley Norton arrived at home from Chicago last Sunday.

John Healy has got the best piece of winter wheat in this part of the country.

Burgess.

Continental Sitkers.

Early in 1783 the Continental congress was discussing financial questions. Alexander Hamilton proposed to fund the public debt and issue certificates for officers' pay which were then issued that the whole matter was supported by Madison. The opponents of a strongly centralized government insisted that the whole matter should be left to the states, even the matter of officers' pay. On March 10, 1783, an anonymous call appeared in Washington's camp at Newburg, on the Hudson, for a meeting of the general and field officers of the army, including one officer for each company, to discuss the aspect of affairs. The call was accompanied by an appeal, written in violent language by Capt. Armstrong, son of Gen. Armstrong. In a general order issued on March 11, Washington denounced this call as irregular and subversive of discipline, and named a day subsequent to that mentioned in the call for a meeting in which to hear the report of the committee sent to congress. By personal appeals to each officer he sought to calm their passions and prevent hasty action. On the 15th the meeting was held according to the call, and Gen. Horatio Gates, who was suspected of being in sympathy with the authors of the appeal, was made chairman to prevent his taking any part in the discussion. A committee was appointed to draw up resolutions, of which Gen. Gates, a zealous friend of Washington, was made chairman. These resolutions were passed in spite of the opposition of the authors of the meeting. Gen. Washington in an address urged the officers to place implicit confidence in the wisdom and justice of congress.—Philadelphia Times.

It Came at Last.

"What's the matter with you?" he hailed across High street yesterday.

"Come over."

"What for?"

"I want yer to go to the grocery with me."

"Will yer git a cocoanut?" queries the first boy, as he crossed the street.

"Lards, no! I want yer company. Come down while I give the grocer an order."

"You must be crazy."

"Come along and see."

"Ma wants yo to send up," he said, as he met the grocer at the door, "five pounds of granulated sugar, half a poung of your best tea, and about two pounds of—"

"Who is your mother?"

"Mrs. Blank."

"Yes, I thought so. Tell her she owes me $27. I want that settled first."

"That's what I've been looking for these last two weeks," said the second boy, as he was overtaken a block away. "That's why I wanted your company. Didn't I tell you crazy about me, now?"

"That's awful," replied number one.

"You bet, and it's so early that I don't believe we can get to the sea shore this year. Say, work you come up and stand behind me while I tell ma that we've got to come right down to hard pan or find another grocery!"—Detroit Free Press.

Uses of Cotton Seed.

Was there ever such a history as that of the cotton seed? For ages it was despised as a nuisance, and burned and dumped as garbage, then discovered to be the very food for which the soil was hungering, and reluctantly adopted to the rank of animals, and afterward found to be nutritious food for beasts, and thereupon heated with something like respect. Once admitted to the place of farm industries it was found to hold thirty-five gallons of pure oil to the ton, worth in its crude state $14 to the ton, or $240,000,000 for the whole crop of seed. But then a system was devised for refining the oil up to a value of $1 a gallon, and the frugal Italian placed a cask of it at the roof of his house, and then set fire to it and the brown breath of the Alps. But then experience showed that the ton of cotton seed was a better fertilizer and a better stock food when robbed of its thirty-five gallons of oil than before, that the hulls of the seeds made the best of fuel for feeding the oil mill engine, that the ashes of the hulls concoted from the engine draught had the highest commercial value as potash, and that the "refuse" of the hole same of the oil was a good soap stock, to carry to the toilet the perfumery of Lubin or Colgate.—Banks' Monthly.

All on Friday.

Four gentlemen engaged in conversation, when a passer city were heated unbelievers in the Mormon superstition regarding Friday as an unlucky day, and finally concluded to test their contempt for and explode the silly notion. So they began to build a ship on Friday, finished her on Friday, launched her on Friday, named her Friday, hired a captain on Friday and sent her off to sea on Friday. The ship was never heard from.—St. Louis Republic.

☞We have upon our table the most complete work for the ladies of every household, Godey's Lady's Book, for August, 1889. It is always too full of good things for any paper to mention or even to give a brief outline of them all. A charming frontispiece greets the eye upon opening the book; besides a handsome colored fashion plate, colored work design, and black fashion plates. The reading matter is always of the purest. This magazine is one of the best, and should be in every family. Address Godey's Lady's Book, Phila., Pa.

The Noss Family Musical Novelty Co. were greeted with a full house at Lewis Grand last night. The program of novelties was entirely different from their last previous engagement here. Of part one, every number was applauded, but on account of the length of the program, nothing was repeated. Part second was a musical medley entitled "A Quick Match," which not only pleased the audience very much, but also showed the remarkable versatility of the entire company. They made more friends last night, and may be sure of another full house next time they come.

For three nights in succession a street medicine fakir held an audience of two or three hundred people on our streets, and sold more goods than an honest man in a legitimate business could sell in a month. We verily believe there were men patronizing this humbug who still go to pay their last week's supply of groceries; men who can't spare a dollar for the paper may have been wasting during the past year. And while we make no pretensions as a phrenologist we will venture one assertion, that a good pan of johnny cake would cure more ills than all the medicine he sold.—Manton Tribune.

Another Boom for Charlevoix.

Mr. Fred Lubow of this city has completed a new photo view of Charlevoix in which has been incorporated nearly all the buildings erected, including the new Baptist church, school house, and opera house, bringing the whole down to date as close as possible, and the work has been lithographed in colors on a card 22x28 inches, and is now on sale at Mr. Wilcox's clothing store. Every reporter who visits Charlevoix this season ought to take one of these pictures home with him, and put it on his wall in a good frame. If one of these could be appropriately framed and hung in the union depots or other public places at Grand Rapids, Lansing, Detroit and a dozen other principal cities of southern Michigan, it would be the cheapest and best paying advertisement ever put out for the benefit of this town. Our citizens can also well afford to become liberal patrons by buying and framing a number to send to distant friends a generous number of this picture. Call at Geo. W. Miller's clothing store for them.

Three Runaways.

Last Thursday noon the Eastport stage team took a ran from in front of the Antrim House, down Bridge street and west on Antrim street nearly to the village limits, scattering the contents of the wagon, but no one was hurt.

On Friday the Boyne City stage team ran from Bartholomew's hardware store to Eaton's office, where the horses tied to go both sides of the telephone pole at once, and left the wagon and harness in a pile, while the horses unloaded themselves ran to the Bridge street house before being caught. No one hurt.

This morning Frank Chaloupka was driving on Bridge street with a single buggy. Coming down the hill in front of Litney & Ackert's livery barn, the buggy hit the heels of the horse (there were no hold-back straps on) and he commenced to kick and then to run, and left his buggy somewhat demoralized in front of Belle Scott's store.

State Teachers' Institute.

The superintendent of public instruction has issued the following circular concerning the state teachers' institute to be held at Boyne City in August:

The state teachers' institute for Charlevoix county will be held at Boyne City, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Monday, August 12, and closing at 4 p. m. Friday, August 16. Mr. H. L. Corbett, Boyne City, local committee.

The value of the instruction received at these institutes is being very generally recognized by teachers and school officers. As a rule, it has been the experience of county examiners and other examining officers, that the most successful teachers are those who have availed themselves of the normal instruction offered by these local institutes.

The daily sessions of the institutes for this year will, as heretofore, be devoted exclusively to topics of special interest to teachers, presented by persons of extended practical experience as teachers, and who have made a special study of Institute work. The evening lectures will be of a popular character.

The institute law allows teachers, whose schools are in session at the time appointed for the county institute, held under the direction of the state superintendent, to close their schools during the continuance of such institute without forfeiting their wages for as many half days as they are in attendance at the institute. This provision of law, and the fact that there will be no tuition or enrollment fee exacted, should insure the attendance of every teacher in the county who possesses the true professional spirit.

Full particulars in regard to board etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

I. O. G. T. Resolutions.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Pine Lake District Lodge which was held at Charlevoix, July 16 and 17, 1889.

WHEREAS, We, the members of the Pine Lake District Lodge of I. O. of G. T. met now in session at Charlevoix, believing the time is ripe and traffic in intoxicating liquors is the greatest scourge, blighting of the present time, ruining the young, blasting the brightest hopes and bringing them to social, moral and eternal destruction;

Be it therefore resolved That the best and only way is the enactment of laws in our state that will prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, that we regret the action of the old political party in wilfully saving all decided action on the temperance question.

Be it further resolved, That we condemn all forms of the traffic, whether free or licensed and demand immediate and the abandonment of the old political parties, and will never leave the ground undone that is possible to do until the traffic is entirely annihilated and we can say, "There is not any liquor in our state and nation."

Also the following:

WHEREAS, Intemperance is the cause of local troubles in this district and

Resolved, That we memorialize Pine Lake District Lodge put forth greater efforts than ever before for the cause of temperance, reorganize the dead ones, even if it be necessary to make a complete change, feeling that the cause of temperance is worthy of every effort which can be put forth.

Also the following:

WHEREAS, The subject of Juvenile Temples has been sadly neglected in this district,

Resolved, That we make an effort to make the cause of Pine Lake District Lodge to organize and maintain juvenile temples throughout the district.

Resolved, That we extend a vote of thanks to the good people of Charlevoix who have thrown open their doors of hospitality and entertained the members of Pine Lake Lodge and entertained them in so acceptable and generous a manner.

Resolved, That we take this work to the Lord in prayer for his blessings in the temperance work.

Michigan State Fair.

The premium list of the State Fair to be held at Lansing, September 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13, is progressing rapidly, there are already forty-five men employed, and 1,000,000 shingles and 200,000 feet of lumber will be required in the erection of additional buildings. Ten acres will be devoted to exhibition of machinery. There will be 3,500 feet in length of horse stalls, 3,100 feet of cattle stalls, 1,200 feet each for cows and sheep. The machinery hall will have an area of 8,560 square feet, and the carriage hall 6,500. Nine hundred feet of water mains are now laid in the grounds. The cattle barn is 400 feet long is a model for that purpose. Offers are provided for the telegraph and telephone system and for the officers. The race track, seventy-five feet in width, is one of the best in the state. The grounds are dry in any weather, with abundance of shade trees, and cannot be excelled.

Three Cents a Head.

The English sparrow must prepare to take his flight and leave the borders of Michigan, or his head will be made the target for the marksman. The legislature amended the laws in regard to the bounty to be paid for the destruction of the pest by making it three cents apiece instead of one-half a cent as before. They are coming in numbers as to be a very irritable nuisance and it is deemed advisable to get rid of them if possible. The law allows three cents apiece for the killing by whatever means. The heads must be taken to the township clerk, when that officer will give a certificate of the number to the person bringing them in, who will, on presentation of the same to the county treasurer, receive payment of the stated amount. The law also makes it the duty of the township clerk to burn the heads of the sparrows immediately. They must be brought to the clerk in lots of not less than ten.—Ex.

Traverse City to Mackinac.

J. B. Mulliken, vice president and general manager of the Chicago and West Michigan railroad, in a recent talk with Roswell Leavitt stated that his company had found a satisfactory route to Traverse City, and that the same had been made and filed. He stated further (and what is of much more importance to the people outside of the immediate locality) that this road is to be extended to the Straits of Mackinaw, and that Elk Rapids is to be reached by a spur, while the main line will be pushed along the eastern shore of Torch lake, with a fair prospect of passing through Bellaire.—Bellaire Breeze.

A SERMON IN RHYME.

If you have a friend worth loving,
Love him; yes, do let him know
That you love him, ere life's evening
Tints his locks with a silver glow.
Why should good words never be said
Of a friend—life is so short.

If you have a song that thrills you,
Sung by any of earth's throng,
Praise it; do not let the singer
Wait deserved praise too long.
Why should one who thrills your heart
Lack the joy you could impart?

Scatter the rose seeds of kindness,
Not nettles in your way;
Leave them, that the harvest Giver,
Love and mercy bestow on you.
Why, with the busy reaper,
Your life shall never lack a friend.

PLEADINGS OF A CHILD.

By Harriet Lane Wallace.

"Hetty, be you mad—gone clean out of your senses? Remember, if you marry that seamy you are nothing to me. I would rather see you in your coffin!"

So saying, Hepsy Trotwood brought down the table with a decided thump upon the kitchen table, thereby scattering a dozen or more rosy-cheeked apples upon the floor.

Mrs. Trotwood had quite forgotten that she was a deacon's wife when she lost her temper in the midst of making apple dumplings for the good man's supper.

"But, auntie, I love him," was the apology, given in tones a soft blush rose to the girl's face.

"Love him! Fiddlestick! Don't talk to me about love!" And again Mrs. Trotwood's gray eyes flashed disapproval.

Tall, thin, hard-featured, the deacon's wife was a woman from whom little mercy could be expected; still, within her heart this childless woman built a shrine, in the light of which was Hetty, the child of her dead sister. Her life had one object in view—to see Hetty a great lady. She gave the girl the advantages of an excellent education. Her wardrobe was far outshone that of the neighboring farmers' daughters. It was the intention of Mrs. Trotwood to make her niece heiress to her wealth, of which she possessed a goodly amount.

Hetty was the acknowledged belle for miles around. Never was there a gather of young folks without her presence, and many a country swain wooing, have sacrificed considerably for a smile of encouragement. She was the apple of the old deacon's eye.

"Mother," he would say to his good wife, "I must send little Hetty to brother John's, in the city, or else she will be falling in love with some great hulking country fellow, and I had good enough for her."

"Nonsense!" would his wife reply. "The child never dreams of such a thing."

But the child did fall in love, and with none other than the student of the village doctor, handsome, good-hearted, penniless Dick Barry; and this falling in love was the cause of Mrs. Trotwood's burst of indignation.

"To think of it!" she would say. "Our Hetty marrying this penniless youth!"

The old lady's hottest hopes, all her ambitious, would be completely cast to the earth should this marriage ever take place.

The apple dumpling proved a failure. The deacon and his wife ate their meal in silence. Hetty was not present. She was having a good cry down by the garden gate. Very lovely she looked in the dim twilight, in a dress of soft texture clinging in graceful folds to a round, shapely figure. He was a very woman that Dick Harry lost his heart to her! The young man, who had resolved never to take into himself a wife until he had attained the dignity of M. D., and made his name in the world, forgot his firm resolution.

He was coming up the big country road, whistling a merry tune. He met his lady-love at the gate.

"Oh, Dick" sobbed Hetty. "Aunt Hepsy says I am never, never marry you? And she looks as if her heart would break.

Poor Dick tried to console her as best he could, departing at length, reassured of the girl's love and confidence.

Hetty returned to the house, wrote a dainty little note, left it on the deacon's desk, and kissed the old couple so fondly that they began to think they were unjust in their accusations, that the dear child would never so forget them as to marry without their consent. But the little note found the following morning had its own story.

Then the country for miles around rang with gossip. "The deacon's niece had run away and married Dick Barry."

Mrs. Trotwood closed her heart, putting away the books, birds and dainty little trousers belonging to her wayward niece, never to mention her name. The Deacon, grown suddenly old, mixed his sorrow. There was no one now to get his slippers or his easy chair ready—no trouble.

Many a time he was tempted to pay a visit to the little white cottage down the road, in which where Dick Harry took his bride; but the thought of his wife's wrath kept him away.

To the young couple adversity and cares had come. Poverty had entered the door, but love had never flown out of the window. Dick was obliged to give up for a time his cherished hope of entering his profession; he worked in the mill, in the evening devoting his leisure hours to study. The young wife bore with patience her cares, although the rose was fast leaving her face.

A baby came, almost unwelcome. Poverty casts a damper over all our joys. The old village doctor shook his head, almost despairing of the young mother's life. Her mind wandered; she kept calling for Aunt Hepsy. The young husband, struggling with grief, went for Mrs. Trotwood, but the old lady was determined, and refused to see her niece. When the white crape emblem of sorrow hung upon the cottage door she was still unmoved, though she watched from behind her drawn curtains the village sexton carry away the pine coffin that held Hetty's baby. Then the country folks declared that old Hepsy Trotwood was cruel—unjust.

Days, weeks, months, years rolled by without bringing reconciliation. Hetty was the mother of a second baby. The young woman frequently passed her aunt's house, and the little one, who was beginning to talk, would ask her who lived in "the pretty house," referring to the deacon's. On learning it was "grandma," she would laugh with delight.

One day in early June, Hetty, busy with her household cares, forgot to closely watch baby, who wandered down the road in the direction of the deacon's house. Mrs. Trotwood sat by the open window. It was her sixtieth birthday.

"Dear me!" she sighed. "How old I am getting—sixty—and the deacon is five years older; time to begin to think of passing away. If the Lord calls the deacon first, I shall be left alone—alone! And the woman bent her head in sorrow. "If Hetty had only married to suit me—and yet Dick seems to be a clever fellow, after all. How cruel I have been, after all these years! Will Hetty forgive me now? Yet she blighted my fondest hopes," she murmured, while the old stern look stole over her face.

Suddenly the patter of little feet was heard, and Mrs. Trotwood saw standing in the open doorway a little child, a lovely, laughing baby, with hair like spun gold and eyes as blue as blue bluebells—such was that she had seen the counterpart of many a time, and which left no room for doubting that before her stood Hepsy's child.

"Is you grandma," asked the child in a sweet, lisping tone.

"Grandma." The word was like magic to the childless heart. Then Hepsy Trotwood did what she had not done for years—cried as if her heart would break. One cannot close the doorway of his heart against the pleadings of a little child. Hepsy Trotwood had a heart, after all.

Five years have passed. The deacon's family and Hetty are reunited. Prosperity has come to the young folks. Dick's hopes are realized. On the front door of one of the most substantial dwellings of the town is a glistening door-plate bearing the name, Richard Barry, M. D.

Mrs. Trotwood has made a new will, "when she will leave her entire fortune to Hetty's baby.

Avalanches.

Only a moderate amount of snow fell in the autumn and early winter of 1887-8 in the canton of Grubunden; about New Year there was considerably less than the average quantity. On the heights of the mountains this coating of scanty snow hardened, under the action of the sun, wind, and intense frost, into a smooth, solid, and icy crust. Therefore, when a heavy snowfall began in February, which lasted without intermission for six days and nights, accumulating an average of five or six feet on the crust of earlier snow I have described, this new deposit was everywhere insecure. It slipped in immense masses from the polished surface of the old snow, having no support, no roughness to which it could adhere, and rushed by its own weight into the valleys at points where ordinary and more slowly acting causes are not wont to launch the thunderbolts of winter. For the same reason succesive avalanches descended upon the same tracks. As soon as one deposit had glided from its slippery ice foundation another snowfall happened, the phenomenon was repeated, the crust of old snow still remaining treacherously smooth and smooth upon the steep declivities. A position, who drove the first of all this winter over the Flesia Pass the highest in Grubunden, and the highest which is open for regular winter traffic in Europe, told me that he had counted between fifty and sixty avalanches, which traversed the road at post road, and some of these were repeated half a dozen times. As the same conditions affected all the other passes of Grubunden, Bernina, Albula, Julier, Splugen, and Bernhardin, it will readily be conceived that traffic was occasionally suspended for several days together, that the arrivals and departures of the post were irregular and that many lives were sacrificed. Singularly enough, no fatal accidents happened to the Swiss post service. Those who suffered were men employed to round the roads, carters, and peasants engaged in felling wood. Few valleys in the canton escaped without the loss of some lives, and the tale is still incomplete; for the most remote regions were entirely shut off for months together from the outer world by enormous avalanches, which interrupted all communications. We do not yet know, and unless an official report be published on the subject we shall probably never know how many human beings fell victims to the fury of the elements this winter.—Cornhill Magazine.

The Weight of Individuals.

The average weight of a boy at birth in seven and that of a girl a little more than six pounds. When they have attained the full development of man or womanhood they should weigh 20 times as much as they did at birth. This would make a man's average weight 140 and a woman's about 125. The height of a male at birth is 1 foot 8 inches, and that of a female 1 foot 6 inches. Fully grown, a man's height should be about three and a half times greater than at birth, or 5 feet 9 inches, while a woman should be 5 feet 3 inches. The weight of individuals who are fully developed and well formed, however, varies within extremes, which are as nearly one to two, while their height varies within limits which at most are as one to one-third. Taking 200 pounds as the maximum of man's weight and 85 as the minimum, we would have the average of 142½ pounds. Placing the maximum weight of woman at 185 pounds and the minimum at 70 pounds, and we get an average of 127½ pounds.—Philadelphia Record.

M'ALLISTER'S CIRCUS.

THE KING OF THE CRESTS TRUST IN A NEW HOLE.

Bill Nye Engaged as Press Agent—A Clown with a Pale-Drying Mirth—Curious Animals, Dazzling Equestrians and Stunning Ring Costumes.

THE BOSS CLOWN.

"I have barely possible that I may not be able to stay with you long enough to work for several weeks at least, owing to negotiations now pending, and, in fact, pretty well settled, between the circus, by the personal agent of which I am to go on the road as press agent. Mr. McAllister's circus, my dear, is a big thing.

At first he did not like me personally, and even now I do not think he has a very warm regard for me, but he has recognized my ability after all, and says that I would make a good press agent for a circus if I would quit drinking and swear off gambling. He says that I could write up a circus so that the people would turn out in droves to see the show, and that really make such a thing a success. I have spoken to him about my ability to facts and data is lost. You cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, though you show. You must make the people feel that they are in the circus, and produce a sense of intense agony. I do not wet know what I shall do when we leave the Mississippi in arms or not. We have not decided yet. I think, however, we will probably go. We are casting about now for names to give our circus. We want something that will look striking to the eye.

Suggestions will be received. We will also take an extra assistant bill poster. It will be a kind of equestrian treble and horse jumping act, and I have charge of the entray. Entray is a French word meaning the act of getting from one scene of intense agony. I do not we know if we shall have our wild horses of the prairie

BEAUTY, RICH AND RARE.

THE MAGNIFICENT ART EXHIBITION NOW PREPARING

For the People of Michigan—Michigan Art and Artists—Some of the Most Fine Paintings in the World Coming to This State.

The people of Michigan have advanced wonderfully in art education within the last twenty-five years. Still a great body are lamentably deficient, large masses not yet having advanced beyond the chromo stage. Nevertheless Michigan may now proudly boast of having produced the most distinctive; by American artist of world-wide reputation, in the person of F. S. Church, and a score or more of artists of considerable fame. Twenty-five years ago there were hardly any purchasers of really good paintings to be found in the state. Now there are a number of private collections, some of them containing pictures famous both in Europe and America, while humble but still meritorious collections may be counted by dozens, and single paintings of a fair grade are scattered all over the state. In short true art is both appreciated and paid for in Michigan by a rapidly increasing body of the people.

MICHIGAN ART GALLERIES.

There are but two public art gal'eries of note in the state. The first of these is the H. C. Lewis art gallery, at Coldwater. Mr. Lewis was the first wealthy gentleman in the State to begin a really fine art collection. Above a quarter of a century ago he had his plans well laid. His collection embraces pictures from most of the best American artists, and is worth a fortune. He will give the gallery to the University of Ann Arbor whenever his wife dies, and is a fine example to liberal public spirit. The Detroit Museum of Art is the other public gallery. Its collection is an excellent one for a progressive school of art, though the Museum has not yet acquired the ownership of many famous pictures, but it has a number of famous pictures loaned to its use and on exhibition.

PRIVATE COLLECTIONS.

There are a number of excellent private art collections in the state, some of them containing works of rare value, and all possessing undeniable merit. Among these are the well-known collections of Gen. R. A. Alger, Senator James McMillan, M. S. Smith, D. M. Ferry, Bela Hubbard, H. S. Pingree, U. S. Minister to Spain Thos. W. Palmer, F. J. Hecker, David Whitney, Jr., George B. Davis, C. F. Freer (who has the best and largest collection of etchings in the United States), and the Detroit Club, in Detroit; Senator Stockbridge, Kalamazoo, Col. George C. Briggs, Grand Rapids, H. G. Peters, Saginaw, ex-Governor Jas. M. Jerome, Saginaw and C. H. Hackley, Muskegon.

MICHIGAN ARTISTS.

Michigan has produced a number of famous artists, and contains many of large present promise. One of the pioneers in fame was J. M. Stanley (deceased) who became the most noted delineator of Indians and Indian scenes. Robert Hopkins, fine marine painter, was among the early Michigan artists. Among others who achieved early reputation were J. M. Hartig, of Grand Rapids, Harley Moore, Kalamazoo, Alvah Bradish, L. T. Iwa, W. R. Conely, Mortimer L. Smith, and J. K. Trego, Detroit.

Among the famous Michigan artists of to-day, Randolph Rogers, the sculptor, of Ann Arbor, Prof. S. Church and Larry Earle, Grand Rapids, Jerome C. Meicher, Julius Rolshoven and Robert Gies, Detroit, are conspicuous. Mr. Meicher has the medals of the Paris and Amsterdam salons, and Mr. Rolshoven the Paris salon medal. Mr. Gies has sold a small panelo for a high price to L'Art, the best art magazine in the world.

Among our promising artists are: Robert Wickenden, W. T. Trego (now pupil of Moisonier, Paris), Robert Spencer, F. F. Peabo, Percy Ives, Arthur J. Goodman, H. S. Bulock, C. E. Blanchard, Detroit, and Will Howe, Grand Rapids (pupil of Von Marke, the famous cattle painter. Owed Mr. Howe's cattle pieces was purchased by the French government, and was given a medal in the salon), and John Owen (water colors).

MICHIGAN LADY ARTISTS.

Michigan has several women whose productions of good art work. Among them are Miss Helen Roby (now in Paris), Miss Carrie M. Albright (teacher in New York), Misses Graham, sisters, Miss Kate Almond, Miss Florence Waterman (formerly of Grand Rapids).

Mr. A. J. Brow, art dealer, Detroit, first brought out the Stanley Indian paintings in chromo, and made them familiar to the people. He has always been a member of the hanging committee at art exhibitions, and has done much to promote public interest and education in art.

MAGNIFICENT ART SHOW.

The great International Exposition, to be held in Detroit in September, is now constructing an immense Art Gallery, to be lighted and hung in the best modern methods, in which will be placed the largest, costliest and finest art exhibition ever shown to the American union. It will draw the rarest art treasures from the galleries and collections mentioned above, and will also import at a great expense the largest and most famous collection ever gathered in the United States, and never before shown to the American public. This is the celebrated American Art Fund collection of the best works by two hundred of the best American artists in Europe, comprising about three hundred and fifty pictures of rare merit, of which about fifty are from the hands of the Paris salons. Among the famous artists represented in this collection are Church, Moran, Hamilton, Poore, Chase, Thrane, J. G. Brown, Brush, Walter, Paul, Brook, Payton and Cors. One of the pictures is a remarkable landscape by Bush, another is a nodal, and Poore's wonderful prize picture,

THE NIGHT OF THE NATIVITY,

which has created a sensation among the artists and critics of Europe and America. The Exhibition will also include the world-famous Last Hours of Mozart, owned by Gen. Alger. One of the rarest and richest exhibits will be Malcoffski's famous great painting, ever before exhibited in the United States, and secured for the great Michigan International Exposition at a cost of about five hundred dollars a day for each day it will remain on show. There will also be a profusion of famous statuary and other art works.

THE RUSSIAN WEDDING FEAST,

This Art Exhibition cannot fail not only to attract the people of Michigan by thousands, but it will be of wide and permanent benefit as a school of popular education in art, filling the eye and the mind with rich object lessons of beauty and cultivated taste to both form and color.

Paine's Victory at Gardiner's Bay.

During the war of 1812 a Montauk cattle keeper gained a signal victory over the English fleet, then lying in Gardiner's bay, under command of Admiral Hardy. Montauk was then a commons for the towns of East and Southampton. These towns people pastured 1,000 or 1,200 head of cattle on Montauk during the summer. These cattle were in charge of three keepers who lived about three miles apart. I think the name of the keeper in question was Paine. He conquered the English fleet with a canoe, a rawhide, and a crew of one Indian. It came thus about:

The English had come ashore in their boats and stolen one of the canoes in his charge. They wanted fresh beef and they got it. Mr. Paine did not propose that his herds should be thus ravaged with impunity. He armed himself with a rawhide. Next he found an Indian. He impressed the Indian with his rawhide and forced him to paddle off to the admiral's ship. Mr. Paine was hailed from the ship and was asked what he wanted. He said he wanted to come on board. He was allowed to come on board.

He was then asked what he wanted. He wanted to see the admiral. What did he want to see the admiral for? To be paid for one of the cattle in his care which had been slain by the admiral's people. What was he going to do about it in case he was not paid? they inquired. Well, he was going to take it out of the English fleet. What was he going to take it out with? With his rawhide!

The admiral was informed that a Yankee was on board threatening to lick the fleet with an armament of one canoe, one Indian and a rawhide. The admiral was not alarmed, but he was amused and interested. He came on deck in his cocked hat and epaulets and all the glitter and glory of the titled British tar of eighty odd years ago.

The admiral and Mr. Paine confronted each other. Mr. Paine did not back down. He repeated his demand and his threat.

"Well," said the admiral, "you are the bravest Yankee I've seen yet."

He ordered him to be paid. Mr. Paine received the value of the slain beast in hard, shining yellow, British gold. Then with his force he rowed ashore, having gained a brave but bloodless victory.—Sag Harbor Express.

Fell of the Paper Collar.

The caprices of fashion order many changes in man's apparel, but it is almost safe to say that the return in popularity of the once all prevailing paper collar is about as probable as the return by the Nineteenth century youth to the powdered wigs, cocked hats and knickerbockers of their colonial predecessors. And yet a decade and a half ago the paper collar, with its muslin foundation and glossy veneer, was almost universally worn. It is now stated, as a reminder of the one time popularity of this ewing, that between the years 1850 and 1770 over 1,000,000 of the collars were sold daily. The extent of yearly sales of these collars nowadays amounts to about 250,000. It is scarcely necessary to add that the paper collar still reigns supreme in the backwoods, and that the circulation of this article of apparel is merely confined to the country place. It is difficult to persuade one's self that this collar was once the dear and particular "trick" of the young and old men of fashion throughout the country. It was first introduced to the favorable notice of the public by a well known New Yorker, a young man about town who had the courage of his convictions and his backs. The "dudes" of that day were as quick then as they are now to "catch on" to a good thing, and the paper collar entered upon its long career of popularity.—New York Tribune.

Boston Children.

What are our children like? Like ladies and gentlemen from the time they can speak. Instead of waiting for a child to get old enough for school, as you say here, we provide a governess, and from the very beginning the little one is taught respect, obedience, politeness and language. In Russia a child is never permitted to kiss the parents except on the hand. He will never presume to examine or use any of their private belongings without first getting permission, and at the entrance of either into a room the child rises, offers his chair with as much deference as though in the presence of a sovereign, and will remain standing until told to be seated. At table the children are considered last and after the meal each one thanks the parent for it before leaving the dining room. And do you know what the result is? Such life long devotion and reverence as few American parents ever receive. Here the old people are shamefully neglected, thrown out of sight, and receive little more consideration than the servants. Old mothers and fathers in my country have the best rooms, the nicest clothes, the choicest dishes from the kitchen and every day they are visited by the children and grandchildren and entertained and favored. In the evening no one is seated before the aged, and the daughter or guest who plays or sings always consults their choice.—Interview in Boston Globe.

Horace Greeley's School Days.

An unpublished letter written by Horace Greeley in November, 1868, to Mr. Richard Eason, of Boston, gives some facts relating to his school life and his teachers. "I did go to school," he wrote, "to Mr. John Yose—also to a Miss Parker—but not quite so long ago as 1812. It was the winter of 1818-19, if my memory serves; if not, it was the winter preceding. I remember Mr. Yose very well; also his brother Alfred (younger). I do not so clearly make out Miss Parker, as I attended school but little in summer, having to work on my father's farm most of the time. Still, I remember the Parker family very well, and especially the oldest daughter whom I presume I went to school to when I was 7 years old."—Boston Traveller.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their use followed by no injury. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make Ayer's use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leidhsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an Effective Remedy

for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grymler, Lowell, Mass.

"I hear boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of long complaint."—E. L. Fulton, Hanover, N. H.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—Th. Ayer, Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Banks, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—Jas. Quinn, 90 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with constipation, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrived at this conclusion only after a fair trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

HUMAN SACRIFICES IN GEORGIA.

Horrible Results of the Preaching of the False Christ.

A Savannah, Ga., dispatch says the negroes of Liberty County, Georgia, are in a state of excitement over the preachings of a man named Bell, a pseudo "Christ," who has been inflicting the ignorant people of the county and telling them that he will lead them into the Promised Land of Canaan next month. Hundreds have left their farms to follow the false Christ. Bell was tried for lunacy and sent to an asylum. His successor, a negro named Jones, began preaching and telling the people that he was sent to succeed Bell. Several days ago in a remote part of the county a woman, who one of James' followers slew a little child, her niece, cutting symbols on the head and body and then throwing the body into a ditch. The woman was arrested and is in jail. The white people fear the violence of deluded negroes, who are crazed with Bell's and James' teachings.

A Ghastly Find in Indiana.

Three bodies, one colored, and two white, were found near Whiting station, Lake County, Indiana, and it is supposed that each of them had a fatal wound exactly on the back of the head. One of them when found was entirely nude with the exception of a shirt, and this fact, together with other evidences, goes to show that the dead men have been committed while the victims slept. Near the colored man was found a pocket-book and several bank notes. Who they are, where they came from, or how they came there is unknown as to any one.

Heavy Damages Awarded.

Charles Orbison, a 15-year-old Philadelphia newsboy, has received a check for $20,625.90 from the Philadelphia Traction Company in payment of a judgment and interest obtained against the corporation for injuries received by an accident in one of the company's cars last year. The first verdict obtained by the boy was for $12,000. From this the company appealed, and the second was for $15,000. The company appealed to the highest court, which fixed the amount at $20,000.

Gov. Lowry Sticks to It.

Superintendent Tyler of the Queen & Crescent Railroad has received a request by a Mississippi detective on a requisition and taken to Jackson, Miss., the man Gov. Lowry and a score or more of citizens of Canton and vicinity, the Sullivan-Kilrain fight. Superintendent Carroll of the same railroad will also be arrested. Lowry expects to have Sullivan, Kilrain and others interested in the fight appear in court next month and be punished for violating the laws of Mississippi.

Shot His Sweetheart and Himself.

At Joola, a small town a few miles south of Paris, Ill., Jesse Ogleman shot Miss Madge Smith, killing her instantly, and then killed himself. Ogleman was the son of a prominent merchant at Amboy, a few miles away, and had for the last two years been paying attention to Miss Smith. He had been jealous for some time past, and while sitting on his front steps they began to quarrel. Ogleman drew his revolver and killed both the girl and himself.

The Venerable Father Corby Dead.

Father Corby of Georgetown College died in Washington. He was the oldest priest in the United States. He was born in Ireland on the 26th of October, 1796, came to Georgetown College in 1827, was ordained priest in 1831, and on the building of the observatory in 1845 took charge of it and took the first longitude and latitude of Washington. He was the instructor of many eminent men.

Breweries in Great Demand.

The parties representing the English syndicate who made offers for the Co-operative Brewing Company's property at Buffalo are negotiating for the Black Rock Brewing Company. It is also stated that the Lake Shore and International breweries may go into the deal. They have submitted figures they are willing to accept for their respective properties.

Three Whalers Lost.

A San Francisco dispatch says: News from Onnalaska by the steamer Bertha confirms recent reports of the loss of three whaling schooners, the Lucy A. Hamilton, Otter, and Annie. No trace of them has been seen in the Arctic, and it is generally believed they are lost. The vessels carried about sixty officers and men.

Farmers Resolved to Break the Combine.

The approaching fight between the Farmers' Alliance, Grange and Wheel and the Jute Bagging Trust is rapidly assuming warlike proportions in Alabama. The farmers propose to use cotton bagging, give jute the go-by, and break the combine if they have to hold back the entire cotton crop.

An Aged Couple Cremated.

At Prankville, Pa., at night a dwelling-house occupied by aged couple, Michael McGrath and wife, was destroyed by fire. Next morning the charred remains of the husband and wife were found in the ruins. The house occupied an isolated situation and the origin of the fire is unknown.

BUSINESS BOOM FOR THE SEASON.

The General Average of Prices Materially Lower than a Week Ago.

R. G. Dun's weekly review of trade says:

For the dull season of the year business times remarkably large. New business of a speculative character is not so prominent as that of the same season in any previous year. From all parts of the country, also, come reports that an active and prosperous fall trade is anticipated, and the crop prospects continue remarkably fine. Some anxiety is manifested concerning the extent of exports of gold, the liquidation of foreign holders of securities, and the doubtful about great operations. Reports from interior cities indicate that the demand for money to move the crops will be ample, and at no time of late years has it still been needed. Trade is very active at Chicago, Milwaukee, Cleveland, with good collections; improving at Pittsburgh; by no means active at Milwaukee, but collections are better; continued very active at Omaha, and a fair average at Minneapolis, Denver, Portland, Or., and Tacoma. Business at Portland, Me., is better than the average and the tone is very firm, while manufacturers do not care to sell woolen goods disposing of goods at present prices. Wheat has declined 2 cents, and corn 1 cent, with severe damage in Dakota, and a reduction of hundreds here. The acreage is not yet known, but it is probable that the yield will fall as low as 400,000 bushels, which, with the large surplus still in hand, will much exceed any demand at present probable. Corn has advanced 1 cent, and oats 2 cents, with a decline in cotton, the general average of cotton being a quarter of a cent, than a week ago, and yellow corn within the month has been higher, and still there are business failures number 205, as compared with 189 last week, and 225 the week before, and 207 in the week two years ago, figures which are not encouraging.

TWO KILLED AND EIGHT INJURED.

Terrific Boiler Explosion at Washington Court House, Ohio.

A dispatch from Washington Court House, Ohio, reports a terrible boiler explosion. A portable saw-mill engine of 20-horse power was pumping out water from wells for the new water-works in process of construction at that place, when suddenly the boiler went to pieces with a terrible report. The dead are:

Fred W. Worrell, engineer, torn all to pieces; Nathaniel Taylor, of Bloomingburg, badly mangled. The injured are: Jacob Bowers, owner of the mill, badly hurt; Jacob Bowers, Jr., Cass, bruised badly; Jim Hopkins, colored, bruised and scalded badly; Charles Robinson, bruised slightly; George Howe, arm, incised wound, and bruised; Jacob Bowers, Sr., head, bruised; Lemuel Bailey, of Bloomingburg, head and scalp badly; John F. Morton, contractor for construction of water-works, very seriously.

The boiler was buried through a forest for 150 yards, and the firebox was sent 100 yards in the other direction. The accident was caused by an overheated boiler, low water, and an inexperienced engineer.

BOUNTIFUL HARVESTS PROMISED.

Montana Not at All Discouraged—Canada Crops.

Reports received concerning the status of cattle and crops throughout Montana are much more favorable than was expected. Want of water is felt in many sections, but people have generally given the idea that things are much worse than was actually the case. There has been copious rains, which have materially helped matters. The Gallatin Valley is green and beautiful, and crops will be fully as good as last year. The Jefferson and Madison Valleys neither crops nor grass are hurt, and there is in all directions a feeling of renewed confidence.

Reports of the condition of crops throughout the Canadian provinces are satisfactory. Wheat will be a full crop, barley two-thirds and oats fair. Root crops suffered somewhat for rain.

DEATH ON A BOAT.

An Excursion Panic-Stricken, Three Losing Their Lives.

The partial destruction of the excursion steamer St. Nicholas occurred on the Savannah River, killing several persons and inflicting serious injury on many others. The St. Nicholas was carrying colored passengers, and when passing Tybee railway bridge the boat was drawn by the current against the bridge with great force. The forward deck was crushed and torn into splinters. Two women were killed instantly and thirty other persons seriously wounded. A panic ensued among those on board, and a scene of wild excitement followed. During the confusion several persons were knocked overboard, and one woman was drowned. Several of the persons injured will die.

THROUGH GREAT PERIL.

Arrival of the Passengers and Crew of a Burned Vessel.

The passengers and crew of the steamer Lawrence L. Baker, of Boston, with fruit consigned to the Boston Fruit Company, have arrived at New Bedford, Mass., on the whaling schooner Franklin. The steamer was burned at sea. She carried six passengers and twenty-one officers and crew. Two firemen, Hugh Wylie, of Liverpool, England, and Ralph Robinson, of Boston, Mass., lost their lives. All the other persons on board were rescued by the Franklin. The fire which destroyed the steamer started in the engine-room and spread with great rapidity. The people on board took to the boats and a raft, and after floating about for several hours were picked up by the Franklin.

FORMING A NATURAL-GAS TRUST.

A Movement to Consolidate Ohio and Indiana Companies.

There is a movement on foot looking to the consolidation of all of the natural-gas companies in the Ohio and Indiana fields and putting them into a trust. Dr. S. A. Baxter, of Lima, Ohio, is quietly engineering the matter, with the aid of J. B. Townsend, H. M. Ernst, and others. It is understood that this arrangement has the sanction of Calvin S. Brice, Oliver H. Payne, and other Standard Oil magnates. They now own the majority of all the stock of the companies in Ohio and Indiana, and will buy up the stock of the remaining independent companies. It is a gigantic scheme, which will probably mature fully in a few weeks.

SHEATHED THE KNIFE.

An Agreement Settling the Trouble Among Virginia Republicans.

A committee of five from the Republican National Executive Committee, consisting of Chairman Quay, Vice Chairman Clarkson of Iowa, Treasurer Dudley of Indiana, Mr. Tressedan of Connecticut, and Mr. Blake of New Jersey, has been in conference at Washington for several days trying to settle the troubles in the Republican party in Virginia. A settlement has been reached by the national committee approving the action of the State Committee in the issued by William Mahone as Chairman of the regular committee, and Mr. Brady, on behalf of the other side, concurred in this action of the committee.

CARDINAL GIBBONS' NEW BOOK.

He Takes Up Arms in an Endeavor to Repel Attacks on Religion.

The new book, "Our Christian Heritage," written by Cardinal Gibbons, will appear next October. The book is an attempted defense of Christianity against the onslaughts of the scientific and of indefinite infidels. To those who think Christianity has outlived its day and is unsuited to the present and would fain supplant it by Buddhism, which they regard as less exacting in its tenets and more adapted to the highest aspirations of man's nature, the Cardinal thinks that there is no good reason why Buddhism which is not eminently found in the Christian religion. There is also a chapter on Socialism.

MOVE AGAINST BOULANGER.

An Order Intended to Deprive Him of Citizenship.

The Paris Republique Francaise says that the Committee of the Senate Court is about to present a report in the case of Boulanger, Count Dillon, and Henri Rochefort of all civil and political rights. The action of the committee is taken on the ground that they have refused to comply with the summons issued by the Senate Court to appear for trial on the charges made against them. This decision will render them ineligible to election to any office in France, and will also make any property they may own in France liable to seizure.

THEY'RE MADE ONE.

Bishop Seymour, of Springfield, Ill., and Mrs. Aymar, of Jersey City.

In New York the Rt. Rev. George F. Seymour, Bishop of the Diocese of Springfield, Ill., was married at Trinity church to Mrs. Mary Atwood Aymar, of Jersey City. The wedding was strictly private, only the near relatives of the bride and bridegroom being present—twelve in number. The ceremony was performed by Dr. Henry Anderson Potter, assisted by the Rev. Morgan Dix. The Episcopal marriage service was given without music.

Another Holocaust in Which Twelve Hundred Persons Perished.

Advices from China state that during a recent fire at Sa Chow, which burned nearly for twenty-three hours, 1,200 dwellings were destroyed. Twelve hundred persons perished in the flames and 600 were crushed to death during the panic that prevailed, while trying to escape. One hundred and twenty-four school-boys were without shelter, and they have been dying at the rate of 100 a day from want and exposure. The authorities are soliciting help from the benevolent and providing assistance as rapidly as possible.

The report is current that the trunk lines are making strong efforts to secure the services of Chairman T. M. Cooley of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the successor of the Trunk Lines Association in place of Mr. Albert Fink, whose resignation was accepted about a month ago. It is believed that he is considering the advisability of accepting the Chairmanship. He is at present on a trip to the Pacific coast.

Murata, inventor of the Murata gun, who have been making a tour of this country to inspect the arsenals and the manufactories, have visited the Cowles Electric Smelting and Aluminum works, at Lockport, N. Y., testing the aluminum bronze for use in the manufacture of guns. They are now ready to return home.

MONEY FOR ROYALTY.

The Prince of Wales Allowed $40,000 a Year.

In the British House of Commons Mr. Gladstone agreed to a compromise on the matter of awards to the royal family, under the terms of which the Prince of Wales is to be allowed $40,000 a year as a substitute for all claims of his children. The proposition met with great disfavor throughout the country.

Campbell, of the Assistant Attorney General's Office, Interior Department, as a committee to forthwith enter upon an investigation of all rearings of pensions as made by the Pension Bureau during the last twelve months, and especially those of pensioners in the Government service, with a view to ascertaining whether any such rearings have been made in violation of law.

Death of a Kansas Miner.

S. S. Cartwright, a wealthy miner who resided in Topeka, Kan., a great many years, and who was worth at least $100,000, has died of heart disease. He was living in a garret, and no one was present at the time of his death. He owned several large cattle ranches in the State, and had valuable real-estate interests in Topeka. He had two daughters and a son at Albany, N. Y. His will makes an equal division of property among them.

ROUGHON A POSTMASTER

MILWAUKEE'S MAIL OFFICIAL SEVERELY SCORED.

The Civil Service Commission Makes Another Report on Their Findings in Connection with That Office—What the Evidence Shows.

A Washington dispatch says: The civil service commission made public its second report in the Milwaukee postoffice case. The commissioners say that Postmaster Paul was given every opportunity to explain the charges against him, and that his explanation that he was unacquainted without a bearing and without being informed of the charges against him is a gross misstatement. The report then recites the examination made by Secretary Doyle and Chief Examiner Webster, whose reports showed such gross violations of the law that the commission unanimously deemed the accusations of such importance as to warrant an investigation by the full board. The report continues:

"Except in two important cases we did not try to get at any new facts, we simply examined Mr. Paul to see whether he could disprove the statements or give any satisfactory explanation of the charges made in the two preliminary reports. He totally failed to do so. That the two been crooked work in the office is admitted by all. The only question is where the responsibility lies. We examined the secretary of the Republican standing committee, Hamilton Smithy, and the chairman, Joseph Sexton, nicely is admitted by all to have done the work of the party, and to have been doing little save assisting in marking the papers and attending occasional formal meetings. Smithy testifies that he was compelled by the postmaster to give the latter free access to the list of eligibles, and Sexton testifies that he was in fact strictly forbidden; and he further testifies that the postmaster, accompanied by one who were eligible, as well as their standing, appeared on occasions to be dealing, and had not schooled himself in the art of waiting. Sexton says he never he knows how near he came to flying the track and plunging the Republican party into ruin. The Republicans were ready and had their knives sharpened, but they wanted was the word, but Blaine had set for himself a different policy, a line of action new to politics, and he followed it to the end. The first communication to pass between Harrison and Blaine was the former's letter of thanks in response to Blaine's telegram of congratulation on the day of his nomination. It was a simple letter of thanks. The next communication was dated Indianapolis, Jan. 12. This was a trap, set by Benjamin Harrison for James G. Blaine. The President-elect had hope was that his mob of the dethroned leader would hear from it in the shape of an act of disloyalty on Blaine's part that would relieve him of the necessity of the disagreeability of taking Blaine into his Cabinet. This failing, he wrote his letter of Jan. 12. It was then proposed by Mr. Blaine and his friends, and the whole conspiracy. Harrison drew on to laugh his views of the foreign policy which he desired to adopt. He went into some details, and was particularly strong and significant in his references to the South American states and to the desirability of avoiding all entanglements and conflicts. Fairly construed, the letter was a polite protest against Blaine's pride and self-respect were touched. He had to be caught and put in the trap. If he had replied as he must have been tempted to reply he would not have been President-elect of State. But he did nothing of the sort. He dissembled. Not a few days Mr. Harrison was disappointed to learn, over Mr. Blaine's signature, that Mr. Blaine fully concurred in the foreign policy: that he, like Harrison, was for avoiding all entanglements and conflicts. Fairly construed, the letter was a polite protest against the

THE BASE-BALL SEASON.

Concerning Corsets.

There is a new corset made for horse-women out of soft leather which is already in demand. It is made by a firm and Crabbe and has been found to be the most comfortable and healthy one with the habit. That is an importation from India, where corsets of this sort are in use. Will the ladies wear it? The most expensive corsets kept in stock by the leading corset and waist makers cost $35, which is indeed about as high as they ever run, though they do sell a few at $50 and even more extravagantly. A popular corset with the younger young woman just now is only about a foot long and does not reach up over the bust at all, being merely a sort of cestus which lies around the hips and gives smoothness and the appearance of the waist, but has the effect of lengthening the waist and giving it a long slender look, and in short, assuming that English figure which is the ambition of every American girl. These short corsets are made of satin, and it is the fancy to have them of varying colors and with a dainty petticoat to match. Thus a girl who is going to put on a gray gown will first fasten about her waist a little cream-colored satin cestus, slip over her head a lemon silk petticoat trimmed with three pink ruffles, draw on a pair of lemon-colored silk stockings, and cover her feet with a pair of gray satin slippers, ruinted at the toes and fastened with a little silver buckle, and she is then and stands ready for her gown.—New York World.

The Clerk Was Unnecessary.

A very popular young lady, who has been visiting in Americus for several weeks, was the center of a little scare in the early train Monday morning. She had been to church and had not got up in time for the train, so one of her admiring gentlemen friends borrowed an alarm clock, which she placed in her room and set to alarm at 4 o'clock. Monday evening a member of young men called on her, and among them came the borrower of the alarm clock. All the others departed, and left the two enjoying themselves as only two young people can. The clock in the parlor burned brightly; all others in the house were either extinguished or burned very low. The clock ticked away in the silence. A year more, and the alarm-clock man held on. At last the parting words were exchanged, and the young man was on the eve of departing, when the said alarm clock broke loose in thundering tones. The young man gave his love one sad, forlorn look and jumped clear off the veranda and with the second leap landed in the street. She left on the early train.—Americus (Ga.) Recorder.

DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOLS.

Interesting Papers Read Before the National Convention at Nashville.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., July 19.—The question of denominational schools occasioned a brisk debate in to-day's session of the National Education Convention. Bishop John J. Keane opened the discussion by reading a paper favoring the proposition. Cardinal Gibbons upon the question: "Should Government Aid Denominational or Denominational Schools?" Bishop Keane in forward read a paper of his on the same subject, taking the position that it is unfair to the tax-payers of all true government and should be discontinued. He was opposed to the system when attending school, a place of Mr. Albert Fink, resigned, he is not in favor of the system. Rev. Dr. Ryan, of Philadelphia, followed Dr. Keane in a paper

The Press Cannot be Muzzled.

Minnesota has a new law prohibiting the publication of accounts of legal executions. An attorney-general out there has decided that the law is unconstitutional. What nonsense! If a legislature can say that the press can be prohibited from mentioning in detail a legalized event such as an execution, it can lay an embargo upon every species of news. The press cannot be muzzled in this way. —Lansing Journal.

Out of Business.

The sugar trust has stifled a small refinery at St. Joseph, Mo. The establishment has been closed, and the stockholders are to be paid $18,000 to refrain from refining. By this little arrangement nearly two hundred people are thrown out of employment. And of such is the kingdom of trusts.—Lansing Journal.

The Fat Fryers.

One year ago the republican leaders were frying the fat out of the manufacturers; now the manufacturers are frying the fat out of the laboring men, and they are doing it so effectively that there will scarcely a grease spot left.—Grayling Democrat.

The Michigan State Fair.

The state fair to be held at Lansing, beginning September 9, will be one of the finest exhibitions ever given by the state agricultural society, if the combined efforts of the efficient officers and committees of that society, and the hustling citizens of the capital city can make it such, which at the present writing seems doubtly assured. A wholly unique and interesting feature will be the exhibition, by the state fish commissioner, of the entire process of propagating fish from the egg to the grown fish. The proper tanks are being arranged, the necessary connections with the city water works are being made, so this wonderful development of modern practical science will be open to inspection of the visitors of the state fair. It is the policy of the fish commissioner to induce the propagation of fish by the people. They will send the necessary small fry to any citizen of the state who will undertake to raise his own fish. Doubtless many people who witness this process at the state fair may have sufficient interest awakened to procure the small fry and raise their own fish for their own table, fresh and toothsome at any meal, and save themselves the weary tramps along the waters of the state where festive mosquito dwth abound, and not unfrequently vain effort to get a bite.

THE FAMOUS FAIRS

AND EXHIBITIONS OF THE ANCIENT AND MODERN WORLD.

An Interesting and Instructive Chapter of History—The Great Fairs of All Nations and All Times—How They Have Led Up to the Immense Modern Exposition—The Part They Have Played in Civilizing the World.

Fairs are very old in history. Far back in the ages fairs were held in Asia. The first mention of them is made hold for centuries, were religious or semi-religious. They draw pilgrims together in vast crowds to some city or shrine, primarily to worship. The ancient Jews thus assembled annually at Jerusalem to celebrate the Feast of the Passover. The great Mohammedan fairs at Mecca, the Russian fair at Nizhni-Novgorod, and the still more venerable fair of India, at Hardwar, on the Upper Ganges, were of a religious order. Of course the pilgrims had to be fed and cared for, and merchants soon perceived that these vast concourses furnished them with exceptionably great markets. Therefore the early historic fairs gradually changed from religious festivals solely to at which the dealers in all sorts of merchandise assembled to sell their wares. Some goods of all sorts and from all regions came together and were compared, and competition fixed prices. The artisans gathered and compared and sold their wares, and showed their newest inventions. Animals were gathered and sold, and the fairs tended to improve breeds and breeding. The government that protected the pilgrims also protected the traders, and made the fairs, in those ages of violence, the safest markets in the world. Over 1,300 years ago, Alfred the Great established the fair in England. In 900 they were established in Flanders. France still holds her ancient fairs at Beaucaire. Spain has her fairs at Isidro del Campo, with the grand religious pilgrimage and festival of San Isidro. Hungary holds hers at Pesth. German fairs date from the 12th century. The principal ones are held at Leipsic, Frankfort-on-the-Main, Nuremberg, on-the-Oder, and Brunswick. The great fair of Italy is that of St. Mary Magdalen, in Sinigalia. Gradually all these fairs have changed from being first religious, then market fairs, to the modern agricultural fair, cattle fair, or horse and sheep fair, or machinery fair, and finally to the most modern fair of all,

THE GREAT EXPOSITION FAIR, which combines all the rest, and constitutes a new world, at which everything that exhibits the progress of modern life is shown, and where states and nations compete with each other in invention, in taste, in grandeur and most beautiful works of art, in manufactures, in improved animals, in agriculture, horticulture, floriculture, in short in all that makes and elevates modern civilization above the dark ages of the past. This great modern fair requires an immense display of money. It must have large and attractive grounds, vast and costly buildings, a purse from which, as in the case of the approaching great Detroit Exposition, $100,000 can be offered as a prize. It must have such a success assured in advance that railroad and steamer companies will be eager to offer low rates for both goods and passengers, and to organize large excursions to attend it from many states. It must attract attention and large public interest all over the continent. Rates, territories, provinces, and transcontinental lines of railroad, must collect for it special exhibits over vast areas of country. It must attract people by rare, costly and large art galleries, and attractive musical concerts, shows, sports and spectacles. Its expenditures must be enormous. In short it must be

GIGANTIC ALL OVER.

World's fairs, for the competition of nations, are a modern outgrowth. The first was held in London, followed, in a few years, by the second, in New York, in 1853. The New York World's fair was formally opened by President Pierce and his cabinet. President Pierce was, at that time, a fine-looking man. His address was brief; his manner urgid. Immediately after the ceremony he visited an immense saloon across the way, where he and other dignitaries took hearty leave of each other. This show how customs have changed since that day. The tall, martial figure of General Scott, his arm in sleeves, with one of his arms in a sling, owing to a recent fall from his carriage, attracted the greatest attention and enthusiasm, as he appeared upon the stage.

THE CENTENNIAL OF 1876,

opened by President Hayes at Lafitte, in Philadelphia, was the next American World's fair. England, France and Austria had held world's fairs previously. In 1855 in France, under Napoleon III, was the most brilliantly successful. The American centenial was of prodigious benefit to the arts and manufactures of the United States. Its revolutionized—it may fairly be said to have created—our present artistic manufacture of furniture, wall paper, silver ware, dinner and gem cutting, cloth making, embroidery in wool, and ceramics; and, strange to say, it for the first time taught the American people how to manufacture good flour and the American people how to make first class bread and coffee. Our roller process-flour, Vienna yeast and Vienna bread, and Vienna coffee came to us from Austria. American architects learned something even from semi-barbarous Japan, and much more from Europe. Until then we were as ill-dressed people. The English and French textile fabrics gave to us as a people, and to our manufacturers, new ideas. The exhibition was a vast school in elegant taste; a vater school in the beauty and value of high art. It has been worth hundreds of millions upon hundreds of millions of dollars to this country.

THE LATEST DEVELOPMENT of American fairs is the Chicago exposition. Among the most famous of the past fairs have been the great Cincinnati Industrial Exposition, the Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, Atlanta, Louisville and Buffalo expositions, with large and costly buildings and other ordinary attractions. The Detroit International Exposition, of the United States and Canada, this year, September 17th-27th, will excel all these in the immensity of the number of its buildings, the beauty of its location and grounds, its $100,000 premiums, and its varied and costly special attractions. Its magnificent art gallery is to contain the best play of machinery and inventions; its vast show of cattle and horses, sheep and swine, its big dog, cat, poultry, bird, and pet animals show; its series of grand concerts and international band tournaments and continual series of races, games, processions, displays, and other extraordinary attractions will be upon a scale unequalled in the history of great expositions. It is from such expositions as this that farmers, manufacturers, merchants, artists, inventors, and all the industries of the country gain fresh impulses and larger knowledge to achieve future triumphs, and advance the nation on the path of improvement and prosperity.

PRECIOUS STONES.

Some of the Superstitions Which Attach to Them—Good and Bad Attributes.

Agate quenches thirst, and if held in the mouth allays fever. It is supposed, at least in fable, to render the wearer invisible, and to turn the sword of foes against themselves. It is the emblem of health and long life, and is dedicated to June. In the zodiac it stands for Scorpio.

Amber is a cure for sore throat and all glandular swellings. It is said to be a concretion of birds' tears. The birds which wept amber were the sisters of Meleager, called Meleagrides, who never ceased weeping for their brother's death.

Amethyst banishes the desire for drink and promotes celibacy. The Greeks thought it counteracted the effects of wine. The amethyst is an emblem of humility and sobriety. It is dedicated to February and Venus. In the zodiac it represents Sagittarius, in metallurgy copper, in Christian art it is given to St. Matthias, and in the Roman Catholic church it is set in the pastoral ring of bishops, whence it is called the prelate's gem.

Cat's eye is considered by the Chinese as a charm against witchcraft, and to be the abode of some genii.

Coral is a talisman against enchantments, thunder, witchcraft, and other perils of flood and field. It was consecrated to Jupiter and Phœbus. Red coral worn about the person is considered a cure for indigestion.

Crystal induces visions, promotes sleep and insures, good dreams. It is dedicated to the moon and in metallurgy stands for silver.

Diamond produces somnambulism and promotes spiritual ecstasy. The diamond is an emblem of innocence and is dedicated to April and the sun. In the zodiac it stands for Virgo, in metallurgy for gold, in Christian art invulnerable faith.

Emerald promotes friendship and constancy of mind. If a serpent fixes its eyes on an emerald it becomes blind. It is an emblem of success in love and is dedicated to May; in the zodiac it stands for Cancer, in metallurgy for iron, and in Christian art it is given to St. John. It is dedicated to Mars.

Garnet preserves health and joy. It is an emblem of constancy and is dedicated to January. This was the carbuncle of the ancients.

Jacinth is also dedicated to January.

Lodestone produces somnambulism, is dedicated to Mercury and in metallurgy represents quicksilver.

Moonstone has the virtue for making trees fruitful and of curing epilepsy. It contains in it an image of the moon, representing its increase and decrease every month.

Onyx contains in it an imprisoned devil, which wakes at sunset and causes terror to the wearer, disturbing sleep with ugly dreams. Cupid, with the sharp point of his arrows, cut the nails of Venus during sleep, and the paring, falling into the Indian sea, sank to the bottom and turned into onyxes. In the zodiac it stand for Aquarius, and conjugal love; in Christian art it symbolizes chastity.

Opal is fatal to love and sows discord between the giver and receiver. Given as an engagement token it is sure to bring ill luck. The opal is an emblem of hope, and is dedicated to October.

Ruby: The Burmese believe that the ruby ripens like fruit. They say that a ruby in its crude state is colorless, and, as it matures, changes first to yellow, then to green, then to blue, and lastly to a brilliant red, its highest state of perfection and ripeness. In the zodiac it stands for Aries. Some give it to December and make it the emblem of brilliant success.

Sapphire produces somnambulism and impels the wearer to all good deeds. In the zodiac it signifies Leo, and in Christian art is dedicated to St. Andrew, emblematic of his heavenly, calm and good hope. Some Clare Prose, gem to April.

Topaz is favorable to hemorrhages, imparts strength and promotes digestion. It is an emblem of fidelity and is dedicated to November. In the zodiac it stands for Taurus, and in Christian art it is given to St. James the Less.

Turquois, given by loving hands, carries with it happiness and good fortune. Its color always pales when the well being of the giver is in peril. It is an emblem of prosperity and is dedicated to December. In the zodiac it stands for Saturn, and in metallurgy for lead.

A bouquet, composed of diamonds, loadstones and sapphires combined, renders a person almost invulnerable and wholly irresistible.

All precious stones are purified by honey.—T. F. Scott in Detroit Free Press.

Put in the Bowl.

At a recent "fashionable event"—an evening party in high circles—a lady lost a valuable earring of great value which could nowhere be found. Thereupon a gentleman who had just returned from the east professed his capability to discover the missing gem by means of an Indian charm. Accordingly he asked all the company to be seated, and after leaving the room he reappeared with a colored glass bowl containing a liquid. He then announced that he should ask all those present to dip their fingers into the vessel, and declared that should any one have secreted the jewel for a joke the jester's hand would be tinged a rich blood red. After the ordeal was gone through every one's hand was found to be red or white, but the earring was found at the bottom of the bowl.—London Telegraph.

The Usual Way.

If you drop your collar button there is one sure method of finding it. After you have hauled the bureau across the room to look under it, then replace the heavy furniture and put on a heavy pair of shoes, start to walk across the room, and before you have taken three steps you will step on the collar button and smash it all to pieces.—Dansville Breeze.

"How to Feed a Railway" is the subject of an article in Scribner's Magazine for August, under which Benjamin Norton, vice president of the Long Island railway, describes the purchasing and supply department of a large railway system—a most important element in its economic management, and important in its supply department.

The Chicago & Grand Trunk Railroad Company have decided to put in a mile of side track on the south side of Lansing, for fair grounds, at Lansing, enabling exhibitors to reach the fair grounds direct with their stock and goods. This outlay of several thousand dollars will do much to make the coming State fair a success. It shows a spirit of enterprise and accomodation that will be fully appreciated.

The original "Pigs in Clover" may look out a patent nine years ago, but he did not know how to advertise. Some six months or more ago, a patent was applied for a patent for "Pigs in Clover," and his game talked about and advertised, and actually made $10,000 before the real inventor secured an injunction. The original inventor can afford to pay that much for the lesson he acquired—how to do business successfully.

Robert Grant, who is an expert accountant, and as a writer of fiction, has written an enthusiastic paper on "Tarpon Fishing in Florida," which is published in Scribner's Magazine for August. In which he graphically and modestly made by him to St. James City, Fla. He had the good fortune to hook a tarpon weighing 132 pounds, though old fishermen had been for three weeks, waiting for a bite. His description of a three hours' fight with his tarpon is very graphic. The illustrations are based on photographs made at the fishing grounds.

A lady who recently made her first visit to Charlevoix writes to her home paper the notes of her trip, from which we take the following: "The air is fresh and exhilerating, and as we dash along over the foaming waves I am half intoxicated with the beauty of the scene. Charlevoix appears in the distance like a beautiful vision. Tasteful dwellings peep from among the green trees, velvety lawns slope down to the waters edge. * * * And now I am sitting upon the shore of lake Michigan. I have wandered along the pebbly beach until I am tired, and now, upon a large boulder, I rest myself, and gaze far out over the broad expanse of water with feelings I cannot describe. I can only say that God has made a very beautiful world and I thank Him for permitting me to see this day. Perhaps I should weary of it, but this ceaseless splash, splash, comes to me now, the most delicious music I have ever heard. I am quite certain that if I should live to be numbered among the aged ones of the land, there will always remain in my heart a fresh, sweet harmony of this happy day."

Everyone who sees the electric light in constant use, will know nothing of this mysterious sources of illumination, should be interested in President Henry Morton's article in Scribner's Magazine for August on "Electricity in Lighting"—the third in the series which was begun in the June issue. Professor Morton takes the reader with him into the great factories where the dynamos and glow-lamps are actually made, and entertainingly explains the processes. Many of the illustrations are from photographs taken at the factories while the men and women were at work.

The Pine Lake Mills ceased operations last week and are closed permanently unless they should soon find a purchaser for the property as it stands. If not sold, it will be torn down and moved away. We understand that the small mill can be bought for less than half what it would cost to build at present prices, and that there are logs enough within reach to keep it in operation for several years. If this is true, some man with a few thousands in money and pluck may make a handsome profit by buying the mill and adjacent store and running them in connection with a logging camp.

The removal of the Pine Lake Lumber Co. will take out of our money circulation a thousand of dollars which have been paid annually for logs and labor.

The Petoskey Record has the following concerning the Sunday afternoon song service at Lewis opera house. "The song service of the McGibeny family on Sunday 14th, inst, at Charlevoix was a great success and awakened a general interest in church music. People of different churches who were very dubious whether it was good "Sunday work" to use a brass band, string band, and concert company on Sunday, were relieved of all doubt on the subject. In addition to the solemn strains of the instrumental numbers, and the songs of the "family" the magnificent volume of the congregational numbers, when the united churches sang with a will guided by the energetic baton of Mr. J. B. McGibeny and sustained by the full band and orchestra, not only inspired every heart, but opened the eyes of all doubters to the possibilities that lie in the cultivation of this field. During the summer these Sunday afternoon song services will continue under the direction of Mr. McGibeny.

All About a Joke.

"A Huge Joke" is without exception the most unique, original, enjoyable, and laughable performance now before the public. From the rise of the curtain to the close of the play, the house is in an uproar; the audience, when not laughing or applauding, sit in mute astonishment at the wonderful amount of versatility displayed by John Thompson. The original songs and duetts, also the latest and most popular songs of the day are rendered in the most artistic manner. The songs and dances by the great comedian John Thompson, are absolutely new and original. The solos on the musical instruments, with their comical accompaniments, defy description. All kinds of instruments are produced—violins, big and little fiddles, cornet, reed, banjo, chime bells, piano, Chinese fiddle, harmonica. A solo is even played on the horns of a cow. The funny jokes, comic characters, and ludicrous situations make the whole the most delicious stew of mirth, music, and melody that one could wish for.—Times, Troy, N. Y.

Mr. Bell Rises to Explain.

EDITOR JOURNAL: I desire to state through your columns that the charge made against me publicly at the song service in Lewis hall last Sunday afternoon to the effect that I raised a "row" at the door over the terms of admission was a gratuious falsehood the speaker was certainly misinformed. Nor did I make any remark on the street concerning the proceedings at the door, only what I am fully prepared to sustain.

W. BELL.

No Song Service Sunday.

Mr. McGibeny announces that on account of members of his family being out of town next Sunday there will be no song service at the opera house next Sunday afternoon.

Farewell to Mr. Downs.

At the Congregational church Sunday evening, Rev. A. O. Downs held his farewell services. In lieu of a sermon, Mr. Smithson was called on for a talk, in which he discussed the relations and duties of the church and pastor; Rev. W. G. Clark referred to the harmonious and enthusiastic work of Mr. Downs with the other ministers in Charlevoix during his two years residence here; and Rev. Mr. Aldrich mentioned some of the possible future results of Mr. Downs' labors here. Mr. Downs referred to some of the pleasant events of his residence here, and the many ties of friendship which must to some extent be broken by his departure to another state. He expected to take a short vacation from regular work, and visit relatives in Colorado; but afterwards would engage permanently, if health would permit, in some western city.

Mr. Downs and family start today for the Petoskey, leaving many friends to wish them a safe and pleasant journey and a speedy return to health.

By his removal the church is left without a pastor.

A Narrow Escape.

On Monday of last week W. S. Stripp, of Evelina, came as near crossing to the golden shore as a man could and not. While staying by a barn a heavy horse hay-fork attached to the beams of the barn over the hay-mow, fell about 24 feet, the sharp point striking him on top of the head, knocking him down. He was carried to the house and supposed to be dying, but in half an hour consciousness returned, and in a few hours he was again in the field apparently as well as ever. His scalp was considerably bruised, but so far as can be discovered no bones were broken. The hay-fork was broken so as to render it useless. It seems a miracle that the sharp point did not shatter the skull and scalp his brains. Mr. Stripp himself is unable to explain or give any theory as to how he could possibly escape.

A Fine Collection of Flowers.

We are acquainted with a Petoskey lady who went to Charlevoix one day last week, and while waiting for the return boat, found nothing better to do than sit on a sand dune by the shore and listen to the story that the waves were telling. She did not know that right there—close by—in easy reach—was the finest collection of begonias in America, embracing 150 varieties. That by turning a couple of corners she could see 40 varieties of the canna, 50 of phlox, 70 of peonies, and 50 of the fleur de lis. We are glad she didn't know because if she had she would have missed the boat.—Petoskey Record.

The Road Will be Built.

A letter from C. S. Gulle states that Lansing has now become interested in the building of the D. C. & E. railroad and will do what it can to bring about that desirable result. The D. C. & E. has not fallen through itself yet, and although there has not been very much said about it lately, the prospects of its being built are as good as they have been at any time.—Bellaire Breeze.

Founding Words.

The first vessel of schooner rig is said to have been built in Gloucester about the year 1713. When she went off the stocks into the water a bystander cried out: "Oh, how she scooms!" The builder instantly replied: "A scooner let her be!" and from that time vessels thus rigged have gone by that name. The word scoon is popularly used in some parts of New England to denote the act of making stones skip along the surface of the water. The Scottish scon means the same thing. The word appears to have been originally written scooner. —Lincoln County News.

Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustacian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. Nothing can be more simple and effective. A treatise on the disease and a dollar bottle of the remedy will be sent to any address free of charge, by the proprietors, Messrs. Copeland & Weddle, 1036 West Bloomfield St., Detroit, Mich. Catarrh, Hay Fever, and Catarrhal Deafness, are the most loathsome of all human maladies, and the most difficult to cure. The new treatment is sent on receipt of two cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

A REMARKABLE CRIME.

THE MURDER OF DR. P. H. CRONIN, OF CHICAGO.

A Deep-Laid Plot—The Network Weaved—The Physician Lured to His Doom—How the Body Was Found and Identified—The Men Engaged in the Conspiracy.

DR. CRONIN'S murder in Chicago on the night of May 4 has created a sensation unparalleled in the annals of crime. Although months have elapsed since the horrible deed was enacted, it still occupies the attention of the public and justly deserves consideration and reconsideration in both editions of the Alliance. That it will continue to be so for many months to come seems, from present appearances, certain. Although there can be no doubt that it will have a baneful influence on the Irish cause for a still longer period.

DR. P. H. CRONIN.

CHAPTER I.

A DEEP-LAID PLOT.

It was a remarkable crime both in its conception and in its execution. The conception showed a mind of diabolical cunning and power. Every detail was carefully planned and executed with remorseless precision. Still more remarkable was the fact that a well-organized machinery set in motion to cover up the crime, and to blacken the character of the murdered man.

That it was the work of a conspiracy directed by men of brains and by ample financial resources at their back has been made perfectly plain by the evidence now before the public. It proved, following among the membership of the conspiracy, the existence of what has been for a portion of the century past a well recognized and unscrupulous adjuncts on the Chicago police force.

The plot has as yet been scarcely half laid bare. Enough has been made public, however, to show clustering of persons interested, some actively, some passively, but all in some degree, in concealing vitally closed under the guise of patriotism, more than passion and fear—men who, in one particular, than can be found in any recorded conspiracy.

The one thing lacking to make it entire the without consequence, in spite of very desperate efforts on the part of the murderers' friends the "woman in the case" is supplied. The crime was purely political.

Dr. Cronin's motive of this most atrocious, nary murder and what is the proper history of the conspiracy which led up to it?

The answers to these questions can only be given under oath at the trial of the murderers. Meanwhile, the public must be satisfied with a mass of conflicting partisan opinion. But the facts of the murder and the crimes which immediately preceded and follow it throw a flood of light upon the subject.

CHAPTER II.

WEAVING THE NETWORK OF MURDER.

Dr. Cronin was an unusual man, having no relatives in Chicago. He was a native Canadian family, passed Cronin, in a cottage in the Windsor Theater building, on North Clark street. There he had his office and resided with his housekeeper.

In the large three-story brick building, corner of South Clark and Washington streets, he had another office on the first floor, and occupied the two small rooms, Nos. 50 and 52. These he used as a sort of club room, where he used evenings as a sort of club room, or loafing place for his friends.

The window of room 52 looked out on the alley way looked out on a narrow alley running from Clark to La Salle street. At the other end of this alley was a house fronting on Clark street, the window of which was so situated that from it could be seen the back door of the house of Dr. Cronin's rooms and of the back door of Dr. J. S. Spaulding, located in the rear of this house, No. 117 Clark street, the window of which was on the second floor. The back windows of both houses were seldom drawn down. This was Feb. 19.

Simonds is described by Thockmorton, the housekeeper, as a man about 2 feet 7 inches in height, stocky built, with dark brown hair, brown mustache, a nose that was almost Roman, dark gray eyes, pleasant address and a slightly English accent.

Two days later Simonds bought some furniture of Israel Sol. and entered it and took the rooms at No. 117 Clark street. He told Hatchett, the landlord, he wanted the furniture for his housekeeper for temporary use only. He paid other visits to Israel and hired a sagebrush and a leather strap.

Simonds' room was found to be vacant March 21, and the occupants of the house could give no information concerning him. After the discovery of the murder, Israel, the Swedish carpenter, hired Marlowe was found who had been hired to take the furniture out of the house, and street to the Carlson cottage in Lake View where the murder was committed.

Dr. Cronin, on the night of May 4, left his friend, Frank Williams, and having an alleged brother, rented the Carlson cottage in Lake View. The furniture from No. 117 Clark street was moved in, but the cottage was never occupied as an "invalid's home." It was a house by the Williams Brothers, and Dr. Cronin saw Frank Williams in the morning, conversation with P. O'Sullivan, the janitor of the flats, a few minutes before, more than once.

P. O'SULLIVAN.

P. O'Sullivan, the janitor, who employed only five or six men, was brought to Dr. Cronin, Dr. Cronin's friend, Judge Mary Jay Jenkins of the Cross Sidney and made a contract with him for $35 a year to attend any of the flats on Clark street. The proprietor of the flats of Sullivan's card was to be the token by which the janitor summoning the Doctor was all right.

CHAPTER III.

THE DOCTOR LURED TO HIS DOOM.

Dr. Cronin was engaged with a patient in his office at his residence on Saturday, May 4. A little after 7 p. m. he left his office, and was drawn by a white horse down on a covered buggy rang the bell violently. Mrs. Conklin opened the door and asked for him. Dr. Cronin took and said he was going to his friend, nervous manner, took paper and left the house.

He was a strongly built man, over five feet eight inches, with a sallow face, flushed with a ruddy tint, a dark mustache, and a pair of small, furtive eyes. He fumbled nervously at his hat brim and waiting for the Doctor, and spoke to Mrs. Conklin.

Mrs. Conklin summoned Dr. Cronin and saw and heard what took place between him and the man. Mrs. Conklin that one of Dr. Cronin's friends was dying, and he wanted him to come at once. Dr. Cronin said he was a friend of Dr. Cronin's, and he would go with him. He went out and called to his friend, Dr. Cronin, and said he was going to his friend, nervous manner, took paper and left the house.

I am satisfied I begin to understand why Bar Harbor's unique prosperity. The resort is topographically and atmospherically perfect. As a tair bloom on nature's virginal breast, it is without flaw. IN GOLDEN PASTURES.

MILLIONS ON MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WORTH OF FINE STOCK.

The Grandest Stock Display Ever Seen in the West—Magnificent Exhibition Preparing for Farmers and Stock Breeders.

The northwest has become within a few years past one of the most noted, if not the most noted, stock breeding sections of the Union, particularly for breeding farm stock—breeds of horses especially for farm work and teaming; breeds of cattle especially for butter, other breeds especially for beef, and others for working ox; breeds of sheep for wool and other breeds for mutton; and breeds of hogs for the production of the best and most profitable pork. The old time farmers would have laughed at the notion of breeding a special class of horses for farm work, or a special class of cows for butter. Times were when the only idea of improved horses was trotters or racers for the track or road. Any mongrel was good enough for farm work. And the best cattle were "all round," equally for butter, beef and work, instead of a special breed for each.

"BEFORE THE WAR"

the northwest bred some noted trotting and running horses. But the breeding of Percherons, Clydesdales, Shire, French draft and French coach horses for work is a business that has developed since the war. So also is the raising of sheep from costly flocks of the best blood in Europe, and cattle from the best herds not only of Great Britain but of all the countries of Europe. The northwest now has dozens of stock farms and scores of stock breeders with reputations that cover the whole continent, and animals that command princely prices. Such Michigan names as those of William Ball, of Hamburg; James M. Turner, of Lansing; Savage & Farnum, of Detroit, and other noted Michigan breeders are known and honored in all countries where there are herd books, stud books or flock registers, and Ohio and Indiana are loud at many of the same sort. In proportion to her farming, population and her suitable area, of the states and of all countries on this half of the globe as a stock raising state. By the last census the value of Michigan live stock reached the enormous aggregate proportion and value of one-tenth of her entire farm property, or about fifty-six millions of dollars! Only nine states surpassed Michigan in the number of horses, eight in cows, ten in milch cows, and three in sheep; and each of these states was either larger in suitable cultivated area, older in the business, greater in population and wealth, or with peculiar advantages of climate and soil. The next census will serve to show such an enormous advance in Michigan stock raising as will make her supremacy self-evident.

Popular interest in stock raising, stock improvement, and stock exhibitions is constantly and rapidly increasing, as are also the number and proportions of investments of capital in the business of stock raising of improved breeds. And skill in developing the finest animals is naturally acquired by practice and experience. Most of the various classes of stock breeders have fairs, meetings and exhibitions. They also lend an important part to county, district and state fairs. Horse shearing festivals and flock shows are common and popular, and show a gratifying annual increase in the number of the best animals with accredited pedigrees. Progress in rearing Jersey, Alderney, Durham, Devon, Dutch belted, Holstein Friesian, Hereford, polled and other choice varieties of cattle, is also marked and gratifying. While there are no special shows of improved swine, except at fairs, the number and quality of the most famous breeds are steadily increasing, and the original razor-backed mongrel hog of the early farmers has almost disappeared. But, while stock breeders have displayed many excellent exhibits at fairs and festivals, they have

At the county, district and state fairs the usual reason has necessarily been to prefer stock with limited quarters in unsightly rough sheds and pens, or in stalls, stews, litter, ill-smelling, unattractive, inconvenient and dirty. Besides, the local and state fairs have not drawn together enough exhibits of stock from other states and Canada to afford liberal opportunities for comparisons that will accomplish the best good for stock breeders. The fair managers have made commendable efforts but they have not been provided with enough capital to furnish first class facilities for stock shows.

The great International Exposition, to be held in Detroit on September 17-27, will afford the stock breeders, farmers and people the first really adequate opportunity for not only of their splendid improved stock of Michigan, but also of the numerous and valuable exhibits from the best flocks and herds of Canada and the other states. The stock buildings will be of immense size, well ventilated, carefully regulated and kept, lighted by electricity, thoroughly watered and provided with every appliance even to the point of luxury, and so arranged that the stock show will be as attractive as possible to the human crowds of visitors, and as pleasant even to the most delicate ladies. The display grounds will be ample, will be separated from other and disturbing exhibits, and will be so continued use, so that at all hours an exhibition of fine stock will be going on alike upon the display grounds and in the stock stables and pens. It will undoubtedly be the grandest exhibition of powerful horses and splendid cattle ever seen in the northwest, with scenes constantly realizing Rosa Bonheur's world-famous picture of "The Horse Fair." And the display of sheep and swine will be as less extraordinary. The farmers have never had such an opportunity, and will no doubt take advantage of it by thousands, and reap a benefit from it that will add greatly to their business interests for many years to come. And the managers of fairs will learn valuable lessons as to the best methods for securing, caring for and displaying farm stock.

Besides there will be a splendid display of varing and road horses, and exciting speed contests upon a specially constructed track, as that honors of all classes will be amply provided for. The business energy, enterprise and vast outlay of capital necessary to produce such an exhibition constitutes a very benefit which deserves wide recognition.

Western Sage Horses.

The old stage teams, which the locomotive and the Pullman car drove into an inglorious retirement, were many of them as fine animals as money could buy. It took a horseman to select and put them together, so they would work well, and in this regard no man ever exceeded Alex Benham, who was for many years superintendent of the line from Denver eastward. It was said of him that he could go into a band of horses, select four or six, harness them to a coach and each was in its proper place. Many of these stage teams became famous all along the line, for speed, endurance and all the other qualities which the boys called a "rattlin team." One of the most noted of these four in hands was the "Little Roan" team. They used to run in and out of Council Bluffs, before the Northwestern road reached that city. Then they were sent out on the plains and gradually worked west, until they reached Laporte, where they remained until the Cheyenne route was abandoned. They were four strawberry roans of Morgan build, medium in size and possessed of the most remarkable strength and fleetness. It was a pleasure to see them travel. The last time the writer saw them was in the summer of 1870, when they were on the line between Denver and Lake Station, then the terminus of the Kansas Pacific. They went off like colts.

"Will they run yet?" was asked of the driver.

"Yes, just as quick as they ever would," and he snapped his whip and away they sprang into a gait which sent the old coach rattling along at a ten mile an hour rate. What became of the gallant little team after this last stage trip the writer never knew, but he ventures the assertion that it was the toughest, gamiest, fleetest four in hand team that ever pulled a coach in harness.—Chicago News.

Beaten by a Prince.

In the office of Manager Amberg, of the German theatre, lay several photographs of a handsome young woman, dressed in theatrical costumes and posed in theatrical ways.

"Those are pictures of Franlein Loisinger," Mr. Amberg said, "and they came in a letter asking if I would engage her for a season in my theatre. She wrote that she had been pretty successful in Germany as a singer and comedienne, and she was willing to come to this country for $100 a week. How much cheaper than that I could have secured her I don't know, for there was not time for negotiations before I received a second letter saying that marriage would make it undesirable for her to come to this country. Pretty soon a cable dispatch appeared in the papers giving the news that this same Fraulein Loisinger had married Prince Alexander of Battenberg. The public knows all about that romance, in which a prince of royal blood fell in love with a stage beauty and made her his wife. I shall keep her pictures and letter as proof of how I was beaten by Prince Alexander."—New York Sun.

One on the Blue Grass Region.

Referring to the blue grass region of Kentucky and its fine horses, a young lady of Mississippi was visiting that section and was entertained at a dinner party at the governor's mansion. During the course of the dinner a degenerate son of the governor talked loosely about things in general, and among others of a visit through Mississippi, remarking that he had not seen a pretty woman in his tour through the state. The fair young girl from Mississippi awaited her opportunity, and during a short lull in the conversation turned and asked the governor if what she had heard of the gentleman of Kentucky were true. The governor wanted to know what it was that had attracted the attention of the whole company was directed to the lady's response.

"Well," said she, "I heard that Kentucky gentlemen educate their horses and turn their cows out to grass."—Washington Post.

The Shell of the Scallop.

The prominence of the scallop in heraldry has been mentioned. It signifies, when found in a coat-of-arms, or carvings upon a mortuary monument, that the person has been a crusader to the Holy Land. In the old time it was known as St. James' or St. Jacob's shell, and was worn by pilgrims and crusaders, sewn to their garments or fastened upon their standards. Many legends cluster about it, and allusions to it are frequent in the poetry and romance of the middle ages, while it often plays a significant part in the religious art of that day. Out of this, and its natural beauty of form, has arisen the wide adaptation of this crenulated or "scalloped" shell in decorative designs by both the painters and sculptors' arts. —Once a Week.

Crime in Italy.

From statistics recently published in that country it would appear that murders are committed in Italy three times oftener than in Austria, four times oftener than in Prussia, five times oftener than in Sweden, four-teen times oftener than in Denmark and sixteen times oftener than in Britain. Crime has also unfortunately been increasing instead of decreasing in Italy of late years. Of the foreign countries which stand favorably in a comparison of the criminal classes with the population may be mentioned Russia, where they number 13 in each 10,000; Portugal, 16 per 10,000; Norway, 18 per 10,000; while Sweden appears to be a very law abiding country, the persons convicted during 1885 being only 4 per 10,000 of the population.—New York Telegram.

J. G. Ramsdell, president of the West Michigan Agricultural and Industrial Society, has sent us the following circular to the press of northern Michigan:

I desire through your columns to call the attention of your agricultural subscribers to the generous offer made by the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad Company in its special premiums for exhibits at the West Michigan Fair, to be held at Grand Rapids Sept. 23 4 5-6-7. This offer will be found on pages 143 and 145 of the society's premium list. Parties desiring can procure a copy of the premium list by writing to James Cox, secretary, Porter block, Grand Rapids. The railroad company, in addition to the premiums, offer to transport all articles for exhibition, to and from the fair, free of charge, and will return to every exhibitor who makes a creditable show and otherwise complies with the terms of the offer, the cost of his ticket to and from the fair. I hope the farmers along the line of the company's road will avail themselves of this generous offer and bring in their products of the farm, dairies, fruits, and flowers, and show to the thousands who will attend the fair what northern Michigan can do."

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:

"For two years I suffered from a severe blood disease, which at times became so bad as to compel liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial, without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I have taken three bottles of this bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Bennett, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I used three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were good for humor, I consume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, of Fernwood, Pa., recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 16 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorder of the stomach and bowels increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, began to discover that my troubles were all gone."—Mrs. A. A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1889.

THE STAR BUILDING.

THE NEW YORK STAR PAPER is based upon the hands of new managers in Northwestern New York, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of it.

During the first months of the change the improvement made in it was so pronounced that it soon attracted universal attention.

A Live, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the freshest of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are crisp, positive and bold. Its democratic principles are so generally known and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, on its recent reorganization, selected it as the paper in which to publish its official notices and utterances before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in nation, State and city, and is the organ of no individual or the organ of no faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York city on Sunday. The matter selected for its literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest merit and reputation. Their united contributions each week make a volume as large as Harper's Magazine, and treating of many more subjects than any monthly magazine or furnish ever published. The whole at a cost of only 5 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in many respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a perfect epitome of the really important news of the week, carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in detail. Care is given to matters of farming, which most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to interest the women of the household. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but to interest him in the general news of the world, leaving the home paper of each subscriber to supply the practical information on all agricultural topics. It is an excellent paper, therefore, to obtain, through favorable club rates, along with the weekly printed in your immediate locality.

IN GOLDEN PASTURES.

MILLIONS ON MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WORTH OF FINE STOCK.

The Grandest Stock Display Ever Seen in the West—Magnificent Exhibition Preparing for Farmers and Stock Breeders.

The northwest has become within a few years past one of the most noted, if not the me-t noted, stock breeding sections of the Union, particularly for breeding farm stock—breeds of horses especially for farm work and teaming; breeds of cattle especially for butter, other breeds especially for beef, and others for working oxen; breeds of sheep for wool and other breeds for mutton; and breeds of hogs for the production of the best and most profitable pork. The old time farmers would have laughed at the notion of breeding a special class of horses for farm work, or a special class of cows for butter. Times were when the only idea of improved horses was trotters or racers for the track or road. Any mongrel was good enough for farm work. And the best cattle were "all round," equally for butter, beef and work, instead of a special breed for each.

"BEFORE THE WAR"

the northwest had some noted trotting and running horses. But the breeding of Percherons, Clydesdales, Shire, French draft and French coach horses for work is a business that has developed since the war. So also is the raising of sheep from costly flocks of the best breed in Europe, and cattle from the best herds not only of Great Britain but of all the countries of Europe. The northwest now has dozens of stock farms and scores of stock breeders with reputations that cover the whole continent, and animals that command princely prices. Such Michigan names as those of William Ball, of Hamburg; James M. Turner, of Lansing; Savage & Farnum, of Detroit, and other noted Michigan breeders are known and honored in all countries where there are herd books, stud books or flock registers, and Ohio and Indiana can boast of many of the same sort. In proportion to her farming, population and her suitable area, of the states and of all countries on this half of the globe as a stock raising state. By the last census the value of Michigan live stock reached the enormous aggregate proportion and value of one-tenth of her entire farm property, or about fifty-six millions of dollars! Only nine states surpassed Michigan in the number of horses, eight in oxen, ten in milch cows, and twice as many as each of these states was either larger in suitable cultivated area, other in the business, greater in population and wealth, or with peculiar advantages of climate and soil. The next census is confidently expected to show such an enormous advance in Michigan stock raising as will make her supremacy self-evident.

MICHIGAN STANDS AT THE HEAD

Popular interest in stock raising, stock improvement, and stock exhibitions is constantly and rapidly increasing, as are also the number and proportions of investments of capital in the business of stock raising of improved breeds. And skill in developing the finest animals is naturally acquired by practice and experience. Most of the various classes of stock breeders have fairs, meetings and exhibitions. They also lend an important part to county, district and state fairs. Sheep shearing festivals and flock shows are common and popular, and show a gratifying annual increase in the number of the best animals with accredited pedigrees. Progress in rearing Jersey, Alderney, Durham, Devon, Dutch belted, Holstein Friesian, Hereford, polled and other choice varieties of cattle, is also marked and gratifying. While there are no special shows of improved swine, except at fairs, the number and quality of the most famous breeds are steadily increasing and the old original razor-backed mongrel hog of the early farmers has almost disappeared. But, while stock breeders have displayed many excellent exhibits at fairs and local shows, they have NEVER HAD AN ADEQUATE EXHIBITION.

At the county, district and state fairs the usual custom has necessarily been to present stock with limited quarters in unsightly rough board sheds and stalls, strewn with litter, ill-smelling, unattractive, inconvenient and dirty. Cattle and horses have been generally led or driven about a ring that is often foul with mud or cloudy with dust, and the people, momentarily attracted, are generally driven off to more agreeable and cleanly exhibits. Trotting and racing stock have been given the best chances for attractive display, and therefore naturally have occupied the most popular attention. Besides, the local and state fairs have not drawn together enough exhibits of stock from other states and Canada to afford liberal opportunities for comparisons that will accomplish the most good for home breeders. The fair managers have made commendable efforts but they have not been provided with enough capital to furnish first class buildings for stock shows.

The great International Exposition, to be held in Detroit on September 17-27, will afford the stock breeders, farmers and people the first really adequate opportunity for not only of their splendid improved stock of Michigan, but also of numerous and valuable exhibits from the best flocks and herds in Canada and the other states. The stock buildings will be of immense size, elegant, clean, carefully regulated and kept, lighted by electricity, thoroughly watered and provided with every appliance even to the point of luxury, and so arranged that the stock show will be as attractive as possible to the immense crowds of visitors, and a pleasure even to the most delicate ladies. The display promises to be so large as to need a separate from other and disturbing exhibits, and will be continued for one, so that at all hours an exhibition of fine stock will be going on side upon the display ground and in the stalls, stables and pens. It will undoubtedly be the grandest exhibition of powerful horses and splendid cattle ever seen in the northwest, with scores constantly realizing Rosa Bonheur's world-famous picture of "The Horse Fair." And the display of sheep and swine will be no less extraordinary. The farmers have never had such an opportunity, and will no doubt take advantage of it by thousands, and reap a benefit from it that will add greatly to their business interests for many years to come. And the managers of fairs will learn valuable lessons as to the best methods for securing, caring for and displaying farm stock.

Besides there will be a splendid display of racing and road horses, and exciting speed contests upon a specially excellent track, so that hosts of all classes will be amply provided for. The business energy, enterprise and true civility of capital necessary to produce such an exhibition constitutes a public benefit which deserves wide recognition.

Western Sage Horses.

The old stage teams, which the locomotive and the Pullman car drove into an inglorious retirement, were many of them as fine animals as money could buy. It took a horseman to select and put them together, so they would work well, and in this regard no man ever exceeded Alex Benham, who was for many years superintendent of the line from Denver eastward. It was said of him that he could go into a band of horses, select four or six, harness them to a coach and each was in its proper place. Many of these stage teams became famous all along the line, for speed, endurance and all the other qualities which the boys called a "rattlin team." One of the most noted of these four in hands was the "Little Rosa" team. They used to run in and out of Council Bluffs, before the Northwestern road reached that city. Then they were sent out on the plains and gradually worked west, until they reached Laporte, where they remained until the Cheyenne route was abandoned. They were four straw-berry roans of Morgan build, medium in size and possessed of the most remarkable strength and fleetness. It was a pleasure to see them travel. The last time the writer saw them was in the summer of 1870, when they were on the line between Denver and Lake Station, then the terminus of the Kansas Pacific. They went off like coils.

"Will they run yet?" was asked of the driver.

"Yes, just as quick as they ever would," and he snapped his whip and away they sprang into a gait which made the old coach rattling along at a ten mile an hour rate. What became of the gallant little team after this last stage trip the writer never knew, but he ventures the assertion that it was the toughest, ganiest, fleetest four in hand team that ever pulled a coach in harness.—Chicago News.

Beaten by a Prince.

In the office of Manager Amberg, of the German theatre, lay several photographs of a handsome young woman, dressed in theatrical costumes and posed in theatrical ways.

"These are pictures of Fraulein Lolsinger," Mr. Amberg said, "and they came in a letter asking if I would engage her for a season in my theatre. She wrote that she had been pretty successful in Germany as a singer and comedienne, and she was willing to come to this country for $100 a week. How much cheaper than that I could have secured her I don't know, for there was not time for negotiations before I received a second letter saying that marriage would make it undesirable for her to come to this country. Pretty soon a cable dispatch appeared in the papers giving the news that this same Fraulein Lolsinger had married Prince Alexander of Battenburg. The public knows all about that romance, in which a prince of royal blood fell in love with a stage beauty and made her his wife. I shill keep her pictures as a kind of proof of how I was beaten by Prince Alexander."—New York Sun.

One on the Blue Grass Region.

Referring to the blue grass region of Kentucky and its fine horses, a young lady of Mississippi was visiting that section and was entertained at a dinner party at the governor's mansion. During the course of the dinner a degenerate son of the governor talked loosely about things in general, and among them of a visit through Mississippi, remarking that he had not seen a pretty woman in his tour through the state. The fair young girl from Mississippi awaited her opportunity, and during a short lull in the conversation turned and asked the governor if what she had heard of the gentleman of Kentucky were true. The governor wanted to know what it was, and the attention of the whole company was directed to the lady's response.

"Well, said she, "I heard that Kentucky gentlemen educate their horses to kick out their sons out to grass."—Washington Post.

The Theft of the Scallop.

The prominence of the scallop in heraldry has been mentioned. It signifies, when found in a coat-of-arms, or carven upon a mortuary monument, that the person has been a crusader to the Holy Land. In the old days it was known as St. James' or St. Jacob's shell, and was worn by pilgrims and crusaders, sewn to their garments or fastened upon their standards. Many legends cluster about it, and allusions to it are frequent in the poetry and romance of the middle ages, while it often plays a significant part in the religious art of that day. Out of this, and its natural place of birth, has arisen the wide adaptation of this cremlated or "scallped" shell in decorative designs in both the painters' and sculptors' arts.—Once a Week.

Crime is Italy.

From statistics recently published in that country it would appear that murders are committed in Italy four times oftener than in Austria, four times oftener than in Prussia, five times oftener than in Sweden, four ten times oftener than in Denmark and twenty times oftener than in Britain. Crime has also unfortunately been increasing instead of decreasing in Italy of late years. Of the foreign countries which stand favorably in a comparison of the criminal classes with those of Italy the population may be mentioned Russia, where they number 13 in each 10,000; Portugal, 16 per 10,000; Norway, 18 per 10,000; while Sweden appears to be a very law abiding country, the persons convicted during 1883 being only 4 per 10,000 of the population.—New York Telegram.

Observations upon the sway of tall chimneys during high winds show that one 115 feet in height and 4 feet in total diameter at the top waved 20 inches during a heavy gale, and another 164 feet high, but with a 6½ feet diameter of flue, moved through an arc of only 6½ inches.

As J. R. Vance and Wm. Knuttie were loading logs in the woods on Thursday last, the trucks tipped over thereby giving Mr. Knuttie's right limb a severe bruise. It is slightly better at present.

As Ed. Nowland was going to Boyne City with a load of bark with his young oxen, they shied off and fell into a deep ravine thereby breaking the wagon. We believe Ed. and the steers escaped without severe injury.

The West Michigan Fair.

J. G. Ramsdell, president of the West Michigan Agricultural and Industrial Society, has issued the following circular to the press of northern Michigan:

I desire through your columns to call the attention of your agricultural subscribers to the generous offer made by the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad Company in its special premiums for exhibits at the West Michigan Fair, to be held at Grand Rapids Sept. 23 & 6-27. This offer will be found on pages 143 and 145 of the society's premium list. Parties desiring can procure a copy of the premium list by writing to James Cox, secretary, Porter block, Grand Rapids. The railroad company in addition to the premiums offer to transport all articles for exhibition, to and from the fair, free of charge, and will return to every exhibitor who makes a creditable show and otherwise complies with the terms of the offer, the cost of his ticket to and from the fair. I hope the farmers along the line of the company's road will avail themselves of this generous offer and bring in the best of their grains, vegetables, fruits, etc., that they can show to the thousands who will attend the fair what northern Michigan can do."

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite as rapid as in others but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and kidneys. After giving several medicines a fair trial without relief, I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and found it benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—Lord. John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than two bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not mention it at first, but it gradually became worse until it became almost unbearable. I could not sit upon my right side. Symptoms of the trouble, liver increased my ills, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, I was disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. A. A. THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF THE EVENTFUL HAPPENINGS OF A WEEK.

Political, Commercial, and Industrial News from All Over the Land—Fires, Accidents, and Crimes—The Gist of the News in a Few Lines.

KILLED IN A WRECK.

Bad Accident on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Road.

A fast passenger train going west collided with a freight train east-bound at a bend in the road at Opleton, two miles east of Oxford, Ohio. The passenger train was running at very high speed. Baggagemaster Shields was killed. Engineer Dougherty was badly hurt, and a Mr. Brannan, a fireman was severely hurt. Seven of the injured were taken to Hamilton by a relief train. The number of killed and wounded will not be greater than twelve or fourteen. Cassius Caldwell, fireman of the freight engine, was killed, and John Dougherty, engineer of the freight, was badly bruised. He takes all the blame on himself and says he forgot his orders. Dan Brannan, engineer of the passenger train, was fatally injured; Fireman Lee Doty and baggage-master Pugh each had a right leg crushed.

A SERIOUS BLOW TO THE KNIGHTS.

Fifteen Thousand Men Decide to Secede from Powderly's Order.

The New York Journeymen Plumbers and Gas and Steam Fitters' Laborers' Unions have decided to sever their connection with the Knights of Labor. This means the desertion of about 15,000 men from the ranks of that organization. A new organization, national in scope and footing, but independent of any other, is to be started. The constitution and by-laws are to be left to the decision of a general convention of the craft, which will be called in Washington in October. The new organization is expected to commence with a membership of over 30,000, a great portion of whom belonged to unions which decilined to assimilate with the Knights of Labor. The secession of the plumbers en masse is said to be the hardest blow the Knights of Labor have yet received.

OHIO DEMOCRATS.

A Likelihood that Campbell Will Be Nominated for Governor.

The Columbus (Ohio) Evening Press publishes reports from Democratic editors in nearly all the counties in the State on the preference of the delegates to the Democratic State Convention for Governor. Ex-Congressman Campbell leads with 274 votes; Governor Foraker is given 196, while Virgil P. Kline, of Cuyahoga County, is counted in. Mr. Allen W. Thurman and other friends of Mr. Neal do not concede Mr. Campbell this number of delegates, and claim that Neal has been made inroads upon Campbell's followers with considerable effect. If Mr. Campbell is nominated Mr. Thurman says he will have to go before the people on a tariff reform platform pure and simple or suffer defeat.

THE TRADE REVIEW.

The General Outlook for Business Somewhat Improved.

Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The business outlook has on the whole improved during the week, but the assignment of the Philadelphia Bourse, the failure of the Indiana one of $100,000, occasioned some disquietude. But the general tone of advices is encouraging. Deep prospects improve, with the probability of a large foreign demand; the cotton crop is seen to be larger than last fall's, the British manufacturer continues in a much stronger position, and the railroad situation is at the least no worse. All the cities except Boston report larger bank clearings than a year ago. As to failures, the failure last present reports build up to 1,500 in the United States, but ultimately fully met. Latest accounts indicate a decided improvement in the wheat prospect in Dakota and Minnesota, the yield being estimated at 30,000,000 bushels, against 60,000,000 last year. The Pacific Northwest, on the whole by promise a larger yield than last year. Cotton reports are favorable, but the sensitiveness of the present supply remains prices. There seems to be real and steady improvement in the situation of the cotton goods of industry, although it is for no reason such as yet, as to clear away uncertainty. The demand for iron in various offices has so far increased as to cause general stiffening of prices, but signs of improvement in the wooden trade are by no means clear, but manufacturers have been busy enough to keep up prices. There is a large fall trade in undoubtedly, the movement of cotton goods is fairly active, factory, and print cloths are a shade stronger, but manufacturers are not willing to sell. The business is fairly good for the season, though there is, perhaps, a rather general feeling that the fall trade does not open quite as early or as briskly as had been hoped. The failures during the week have been 201 in the United States, as against 189 last week, and 214 in the week previous. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 179 in the United States and 22 in Canada.

WHEAT IN THE NORTHWEST.

Prospect That the Crop Will Be Much Larger Than Last Year.

The following estimate is compiled by Colonel G. D. Rogers, of Minneapolis, editor of the Market Record, and one of the most reliable crop statisticians in the Northwest:

The seeding grain in the spring wheat sections has progressed enough toward maturity so that it is possible to form a fair estimate of the yield. That it will amount to more than 60,000,000 bushels, as it did a few days ago there is not the least doubt. The greatest yield in the history of the Northwest was 60,000,000 bushels, which many think not too high, the total would be some 67,000,000 bushels, and for both Dakotas eight bushels may not be too high, or a round-up of 30,000,000 bushels in Dakota. In the Minnesota crop, 30,000,000 bushels, the total was 30,000,000 bushels, perhaps not less than 35,000,000 bushels of all sorts. It is quite generally conceded that the promise is for some 35,000,000 bushels more than a year ago. Made a concession, if correct, would indicate 80,000,000 bushels of spring wheat, and 20,000,000 bushels winter wheat, or 100,000,000 bushels of wheat in the North west week, although a great deal in the South is not ripe enough now and much will not be in the North next week. So far very little shrunken wheat has been discovered, but some is in a stage that might be affected yet.

DEATH FROM FALLING WALLS.

A Building Blown Down, Crushing a Cottage and Killing Its Inmates.

In a terrible storm at Chicago a new three-story brick building on the northeast corner of Leavitt and Twenty-first streets fell to the ground, crushing in the weak a cottage which stood near by, and killing eight persons, as follows: Mrs. Christina Hoeck, aged 20; Hannah Hoch, 8 years old; Albert Hoch, 6 years; C. Ferdinanchoc, 20 years; Mrs. Ferdinanchoc, 18 years; Cora Ferdinanchoc, 5 years; Aida Ferdinanchoc, 3 years; Mary Ferdinanchoc, 4 years. The wounded are: Charles Hoch, 43 years; August Hoch, 13 years; Louis Ferdinanchoc, 8 years; Ada Ferdinanchoc, 7 years. The building which fell upon it was so new that the fresh mortar offered little resistance to the furious gusts of wind and rain. Its foundations were laid only five weeks ago, but the walls were finished and the roof was partially on. The accident occurred when every member of the two families was on the first floor. But so sudden was the crash that ingulfed them that not one escaped from the house, all going down under a mass of flying bricks and mortar. A terrific swaying of the tall structure, a swinging of its roof, and before a word of warning could be given it utterly collapsed.

A CINCINNATI TRAGEDY.

A Colored Coachman Murders and Robs His Employer.

At Cincinnati Surgeon General Jones, a well-known citizen, disappeared from his home and for three days no trace of him could be found. Finally a bloody trail was found leading to a fewer manhole, and in it the body of Gen. Jones, murdered by heavy blows on the head, was found. Several arrests were made, the last being that of Charles Bitts, the dead man's colored coachman, who has made a full confession of the crime. He related the details of the tragedy with the utmost unconcern. He says he stole Gen. Jones' watch and pawned it for $10. The watch was found in a Sixth street pawn-shop. It is probable an effort will be made to indict the colored Bitts as soon as possible. Public excitement over the horrible crime is still great, but there is no chance of Bitts being lynched, as he is securely confined. He described minutely the manner in which he killed the aged Colonel. After he had struck him down the murderer coolly watched his death struggles. He did not give him another blow to put him out of his misery, but saw him struggle and gasp for half an hour until he expired.

A HAPPY ANNIVERSARY.

The Gladstones' Golden Wedding Appropriately Celebrated.

The golden wedding day of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone occurred on the 25th. The Queen telegraphed a congratulatory message to the distinguished couple, and the Prince and Princess of Wales and other members of the royal family sent letters to them. The Prince of Wales also sent a gold bracelet to Mr. Gladstone. A number of Liberal ladies presented a portrait by Millais of Mr. Gladstone with his grandson. A large number of other presents were received. Mr. Gladstone rose early and attended morning service. The family took breakfast together at the James street residence of Mr. Gladstone. There was an immense number of callers during the day, among them being Mr. John Morley, Sir William Vernon Harcourt, and the Earl of Rosebery, and other Liberal peers.

Miss D'Alma, who performed on the trapeze, was drowned. It is reported that some employes also lost their lives. Saulsbury, on Big Tiger River, is virtually wiped out of existence. Loss, $50,000.

Large numbers of churches and other large buildings and hundreds of small dwellings have been swept away, and along the banks of the Danube alone twenty-one large mills have been destroyed. A large ferryboat plying between Pesth and Buda was caught in the storm and buried against a steamship. The ferryboat was crowded with passengers, nearly every one of whom was lost. A circus pavilion was demolished at Szegedin and a number of spectators injured, some of them fatally.

BEAT AN OCEAN RACE.

The New Hamburg Steamer Columbia from The Needles to Sandy Hook.

From The Needles to Sandy Hook, N. J., 3,100 miles, in 6 days 21 hours 27 minutes, is the best time ever made by an ocean steamer over that course, and it was accomplished by the new Hamburg-American twin screw steamer Columbia, the other day. The Columbia's time not only beats all previous records to the westward for that distance, but it also reduces the record made by all the fast steamers on their maiden trips from Liverpool to New York. The Columbia is 40 feet long, 50 feet wide, 38 feet deep, and has 10,000 tons displacement and 12,500 horsepower engines.

EPIDEMICS AMONG CATTLE.

Various Diseases Raging Among the Herds in the Southwest.

There is a great deal of apprehension throughout the southern part of the State of Texas from the fact that a large number of cattle have died in Texas, and the Territory and Colorado were quarantined several days ago against Texas cattle. Reports of the disease in Sumner and Montgomery counties consisted a called meeting of the Live Stock Sanitary Board to be held at Kansas City, to consult with Kansas City cattlemen and take action. It is not improbable that the Board will quarantine against Texas and the Indian Territory.

Ohio Prohibitionists Name a Ticket.

The Prohibition State Convention of Ohio adopted a platform which demands suppression of the liquor traffic, favors woman suffrage; declares that Sunday and all other laws should be strictly enforced; denounces trusts; that all officials be paid by salaries; declares that justice, uniformity, and stability in tariff schedules demand that the question should be settled on a non-sectional basis, and favors arbitration as a means of settling labor troubles. The following nominations were made:

J. B. Helwig, for Governor; L. B. Logan, of Alliance, for Lieutenant Governor; Gideon T. Stewart, of Norwalk, for Supreme Judge; D. M. Overholtzer, of Toledo, for State Secretary; J. Fenney, of Ashtabula, for Attorney General; J. Helwig is also candidate for Congressman-at-Large.

A Poor Woman's Long Journey.

A peculiar occurrence has been passed through Cleveland, Ohio. A woman, plainly dressed, and a little girl about 15 years of age, tugged along at a rickety old dust-covered handcart in which were seated two bright-looking children with sun-burned faces and ragged clothes. The woman said that her name was Mrs. Mary Johnson, and that she and her children had come all the way from Johnstown, Pa., with one little handcart. Yes, Johnson said that her husband had been killed in the big flood. She was on her way to Lansing, Mich.

Great indignation has been aroused at Ottawa, Ontario, over the recent selection of a Canadian sealer in Behring Sea by a United States revenue cutter. A hastily summoned cabinet meeting had the matter under consideration, and the collector at Victoria has been telegraphed to forward full official report. The Canadian Government will make strong representations to England, and an extra cabinet minister said "If the imperial authorities have any redcoats to show they will surely show it now."

The Salmon Crop Short.

The Julyn salmon packer estimates the total Columbia River salmon pack to the end of the season at 280,000 cases, which includes 30,000 cases of steel-head, reducing the regular spring pack to 230,000 cases. This indicates a shortage of 80,000 cases as compared with the season of 1888. Alaska advices to July 15 indicate a shortage in the season's catch there, but no definite figures of the total catch have yet been published.

A $12,000 Fire at Spokane Falls.

DESTRUCTION BY STORM.

MUCH DAMAGE TO PROPERTY IN THE EAST.

A Cyclone Devastates an Elder County (N. Y.) Village—The Flood in New Jersey Swamps Many Cellars—Lightning Set Fire to an Electric Storm.

A Poughkeepsie, N. Y., dispatch says: A cyclone struck Ellis Corners, Ulster county, four miles west of Highland, Sunday afternoon, and left a path of ruin and injuring a number of persons. The cyclone, which was accompanied by a roaring sound that terrified the people, came in the form of a funnel-shaped cloud. Matthew Harcourt's vineyard was completely ruined and every tree in his apple orchard was rooted up, the trees being carried away as though they were feathers. The house and barn of John Nelson were already and completely demolished, broken timbers being carried hundreds of feet. Mr. Nelson and his wife were blown out of the house along with the flying timbers and both were seriously but not fatally injured. Two barns belonging to Patrick McGowan were totally destroyed. Mr. McGowan, who is 80 years old, was so badly injured that no hopes of his recovery are entertained.

There being no more buildings in the path of the tornado no more serious damage was done. Bed quilts and dresses were carried a mile and a half and found four miles from the scene of the storm. Hay tedders were also found stuck up in the mountains some distance away.

A Newark, N. J., telegram says that plans has just experienced the most disastrous storm that ever visited that place. The city cellars were flooded and sewers burst, and the water ran through the streets in the lower section. A washout occurred in the Morris Canal near Belleville, and Orange and trains were delayed for many hours. The streets were almost impassable, including the postoffice, were carried away, and the Lackawanna road was washed out of one storehouse. In Orange Valley the tracks up to the station were washed out and great damage has been done to the numerous but beautiful gardens and lawns. Hundreds of saddle around on planks and to swim in order to get to places of safety on high ground. The storm was the most clair also report great damage to property in the Valley of Jersey, which has been lost.

The greatest alarm prevails around Millburn. Above it is the Orange water reservoir dam, which is not regarded as safe. Should it burst it would overflow Millburn and entirely wash out the railway river, of which it is the source, and the damage would reach as far as Rahway. The dam is still reported all right, but the Millburn people are preparing to move to high ground. Nearly every bridge in the country is impassable, and all the bridges have been washed away.

A Plainfield, N. J., dispatch reports that place suffering from the greatest flood ever known. The dam at the Green pond is slowly the Green Valley mills, has given way, carrying with it the Goldsmith's two houses and many barns and seriously undermining the Green Valley road. Stony Brook, in the heart of the town, has also given way and caused much damage. The immense dam at Westfield, back of the Plainfield, has not yet gone, but the national body of water was thereby thrown into the valley of Green Brook, which does not contain it and the water rushed across the Plainfield and Westfield road, the finest residence portion of Plainfield. The water ran from two to five feet on the square miles of thickly settled territory in Plainfield and Westfield. There were many gallant rescues of life.

In The South.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., July 31.—This section was visited last night by the most terrible storm that the oldest inhabitants remember. Yesterday was the hottest and most oppressive of the season, and people thought the clouds seemed to come up from every point of the compass and meet over this city, where they hung for three hours, during which time the rain poured in torrents. The residences of Moses Mock, Moses Bonn, J. C. Walker, Mrs. E. E. Wade, Rev. V. N. Ragland, Judge Rose, and the livery stable of Keith & Hooper, in which one horse was killed, were all blown to atoms. The large farm of Capt. Thomas Brooks, editor of the Fayetteville Republican, was set on fire and destroyed, together with a large quantity of wheat and grain and 40 horses. The residence of Thomas Holland, Esq., was blown to atoms, his family escaping by a miracle. Mr. Nelson and his wife were blown out of the house along with the flying timbers and both were seriously but not fatally injured. Two barns belonging to Patrick McGowan were totally destroyed. Mr. McGowan, who is 80 years old, was so badly injured that no hopes of his recovery are entertained.

There being no more buildings in the path of the tornado no more serious damage was done. Bed quilts and dresses were carried a mile and a half and found four miles from the scene of the storm. Hay tedders were also found stuck up in the mountains some distance away.

A Newark, N. J., telegram says that place has just experienced the most disastrous storm that ever visited that place. The city cellars were flooded and sewers burst, and the water ran through the streets in the lower section. A washout occurred in the Morris Canal near Belleville, and Orange and trains were delayed for many hours. The streets were almost impassable, including the postoffice, were carried away, and the Lackawanna road was washed out of one storehouse. In Orange Valley the tracks up to the station were washed out and great damage has been done to the numerous but beautiful gardens and lawns. Hundreds of saddle around on planks and to swim in order to get to places of safety on high ground. The storm was the most clair also report great damage to property in the Valley of Jersey, which has been lost.

Whalers Lost on the Arctic.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The following telegram was received by the Secretary of the Navy to-day from San Francisco:

"The Thetis arrived at St. Michael, Behring sea, from the Arctic ocean, July 27, with a portion of the survivors of the bark Little Olive of New Bedford, Mass., which was wrecked at Point Hope, Arctic ocean, Oct. 3, 1888. Out of thirty-three men but eight arrived. The whaling bark Ohio Second of New Bedford, Mass., was wrecked off Point Barrow, about June 1, 1889. The vessel was a total loss, but officers and men were saved."

GREAT SHOE FIRM FAILS

THE LIABILITIES REPORTED AT A MILLION AND A QUARTER.

Assignment of the Firm of Batchelder & Co. of Boston, Creating Consternation Among the Trade—Causes Leading to the Collapse—Prospects of Resumption.

A Boston dispatch says: E. and A. H. Batchelder & Co., among the largest boot and shoe firms in Boston, and doing business at 106 Summer street, have assigned.

Mr. Batchelder of the firm stated that the assignment would reach about $1,250,000, with nominal assets about the same figure. An expert accountant is now going over the books, and a report will be made to the creditors as soon as possible. The assignees are Thomas E. Proctor of Boston and R. Batchelder of North Brookfield. The larger amount of the indebtedness is said to be on paper and held by parties who are at present unknown to the firm. Two large bills of indebtedness is to banks and individuals. The leather trade will not suffer, as the firm paid cash for most of its leather. The company is one of long standing, and the failure creates great surprise.

This was one of the ten firms in Worcester county that had a long contest with the Knights of Labor in 1887, lasting some five months, and this struggle, which resulted in favor of the manufacturers, was very expensive to the Batchelders, and contributed directly or indirectly to the present embarrassment. The immediate cause of the failure is large losses made by A. H. Batchelder outside of the business, and the fact that the recent large failures in the leather trade, followed by the Lewis Brothers failure, added to the loss of the senior member of the firm, have rendered it difficult for the ready money on the firm's commercial paper. It is understood that the manufacturing business of the firm has been profitable and this makes it likely that the business will be re-established under some arrangement between the firm and its creditors. The firm owes its present embarrassment, it is said, to a mad to be worth over $200,000, and also were the Batchelder interests in the business. Gen. Ezra Ames, a member of the Board, is reported as saying:

I don't think Dr. Barry is guilty of the least intentional wrong. He is a man of great energy and ability, and I think he was somewhat easily embarrassed when he came to Ann Arbor, and the result was that he was induced to do in that single respect he is deficient in reasoning faculty

There were seven contestants, and all did remarkably well. Cassie Box, with "A Voice From the Poorhouse," won the medal, and well she deserved it; her speaking was excellent for one so young, being only 13. Judging from the expressions that we have heard from different ones since, the contest has been a great help to the cause of prohibition in this place. Lake Side.

Live and Die on the Water.

I took a ride on the river this afternoon. Canton has about 300,000 people who live on the water, and there is no buisness in the world than this city of boats. Crafts of all kinds, from the small steamer, the great Chinese junk and the river cargo boats to the sampans and the little tubs rowed by one or two like paddles, move here and there, or dart in and out through forests of masts. Whole families live on boats about twenty feet long and no wider than the ordinary city vestibule. Here children are born, grow up and die.

Marriages take place and the whole business and actions of life go on. Little children swarm over them, and at two years old with cues hanging down their backs play about upon their decks. The boys have little round barrels or drums about a foot long and six inches in diameter tied by strings to their backs, and many girls of the same size have nothing. If the girl falls overboard it would be good fortune to the poor family to get rid of the expense of raising her, but the boy must have his life preserve.—Frank G. Carpenter.

☞We notice a new departure in the treatment of disease that promises to revolutionize the medicine business. It consists in the collection of the specifics used by noted specialists of Europe and America and bringing them within the reach of all. For instance, the treatment pursued by special physicians who treat indigestion, stomach and liver troubles only, was obtained and prepared. The treatments of other physicians, celebrated for curing catarrh, were procured, and so on till these incomparable cures now include disease of the lungs, kidneys, female weaknesses, rheumatism, nervous debility and piles. Originated and used by specialists, being a positive cure for each disease, these preparations are the best remedies procurable. We advise all to send 3 cent stamp to the Chase Medical Specialty Co., 179 West Adams St., Chicago, Ill. and receive by return mail their interesting hand book. 7b8o

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its several tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night, and, with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lake." Thus write W. O. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle at P. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store.

Pain Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sill, Druggist, Dippes, Ind., testifies, I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at P. G. VALUE OF THE DOG IN WAR.

Some of the Uses to Which Our Canine Friends Are Being Trained.

Veterinary Surgeon Bennett, in his lecture at the United States institute, told the interesting and strange story of the war dog from Roman days downward. Coming to Christian times we are reminded of the war dog used by the Spaniards in America; by the Earl of Essex in Ireland during the Spanish war; by the English in the defense of Tangiers, when dogs saved the guards from a great ambush of Moors; of the famous French dog Mustache, who detected a surprise the first night before Alexandria, who fought at Marengo, saved the standard of his regiment before Austerlitz, and was decorated on the battlefield. Then the lecturer recalled how, after the famous campaign of Gen. Skobeloff in Asia Minor, the Russians decided to instruct dogs as sentinels, and how finally the Germans took up the question in 1883 and developed it until now a dog can carry back a message from outposts more quickly than the best mounted uhlans. There are at least five distinct purposes for which trained dogs can be used in war:

1. As auxiliary sentinels to the outposts and sentries and to the advanced, rear and flank guards in general.
2. As scouts, on the march, on reconnoissance, and patrol duties.
3. As dispatch bearers, on the march, in camp, in action, etc.
4. As auxiliary ammunition carriers on the march and in action.
5. As searchers for the wounded and killed after an engagement.

Coming to the best kind of dogs for training, the lecturer had a good word of course to say for the sheep dog, for the retriever and the spaniel, and for the bloodhound as the dog par excellence for tracking, for following up the enemy into the mountains, through jungle and forest, and for running down dakoits and other marauders.

And since the bloodhound scent is so acute he would require neither to hear nor see to give warning of the approach of the foe at night or in thick covert. In a discussion among some experts and distinguished and "doggy" general officers following the lecture, it was pointed out that the bloodhound, in sentry work or on night marches, could give warning by his nose alone of the approach of strange bodies at a distance of about 300 yards, under favorable conditions of wind, and that the bloodhound's steadfastness by night and day in following up human scent is such that although crossed by deer and other game he does not leave the leading scent.

By way of illustrating the value of the war dog in carrying ammunition during action to the front, a trained retriever was shown girthed with his leather saddle bags capable of carrying eighty rounds of the new rifle cartridge. Altogether the dog appeared to find considerable favor among the audience gathered at Whitehall place, and the general opinion seemed to prevail that if he is ever long enough to find official recognition of the war office he is destined to play a great part in the game of our little wars.—Pall Mall Budget.

The Parrot and the Bat.

On a sultry evening last week a bat flew into the sitting room of a house at Scranton, Pa., and darted against the parrot's cage. It struck the cage with force enough to drive it between the wires, and it began to creep around the bottom of the cage and flap its injured wings. The parrot was asleep when the bat flew in, but it got awake in an instant, and it screeched and screamed and yelled "Oh my!" as many times that the lady of the house ran in from the piazza to see what the trouble was with the family pet. The moment she entered the room the parrot told the fluttering little creature to get out in a very shrill tone, repeating the command a number of times. The bat didn't get out, although it tried very hard to do so, and the parrot got mad, bristled up and dived from its perch at the puny intruder. For a few seconds the parrot had such a lively tussle in the bottom of the cage that it upset everything and scattered seeds all around the room, and then it hopped back to its perch and began to scratch its throat with its right foot as though it had been bitten by the bat.

"Gracious! how that hurt!" the parrot yelled, after it had stopped scratching, and smoothed out its wings and feathers, the bat still wabbling about and trying to find a place to get out.

It couldn't find one, and the parrot sang out: "I'll fix it!" and pitched at the bat again. The little thing squeaked and tried to defend itself when the parrot tackled it, but the ugly bird used both claws and bill, and it soon had the bat's wings torn half off. Then it gave the bat a pinch on the neck, shook it up and down, dropped it suddenly and hopped to the top of the cage and shrieked, looking down at the lying little creature. When the parrot saw the bat was dead, it looked at its mistress, jumped from its perch to its ring and back again, laughed, and yelled out:

"Wink it 'll, mother!"

The value of the parrot had doubled in the estimation of the lady since it killed the bat.—Philadelphia North American.

English as she is Spelled.

Not long ago a quite spirited teacher in a Kingston school talked for a short time to her class of little darkies on the subject of "Washington," and then told them to write on their slates what they could them as "I submit the con-positions to her. One little girl was quite vexed because her teacher laughed heartily when she examined her slate and told her to take the slate upstairs to Miss ——. The little miss said:

"I did so, and then she laughed, too, just because I spelled United States 'Youngisted Slates.' 'Y-ou' spells you, don't yo' and 'n-g-h-s' spells night, and 'ed' spells the rest of it, and—and"—with pouting lips—"it spells United States, and that's the only way I know how to make it."—Kingston Freeman.

Out of the Question.

"Fix your eyes on that sheet of paper hanging on the wall," said the photographer, and another and a pleasant expression."

"Hold on!" exclaimed the sitter, in some excitement. "Isn't that an official list of the Louisiana lottery drawing?"

"I think it is."

The young man hastily left the chair and went over to examine the document.

"Mister," he said, as he took his hat and moved slowly toward the door, "it's a mad, hopeless, another-$2-gone-to-thunder look on his face, "I'll come in some time next week and have this picture taken, if it will suit you just as well."—Chicago Tribune.

THE SIGN OF THE THREE BALLS.

Friend of the Impecunious Who Spout Diamonds to Fight Fortune.

If you want to study human nature, don't go to a police court, but take a day off and spend it behind the counter of a pawnbroker's shop.

There is no more agreeable place, and if you don't find out something about the weaknesses and foibles of biped's there it is because you have not the faculty for learning.

The faithful friend of the impecunious, "my uncle," is found in all the great cities of the great country, and you cannot mistake his place, for wherever one displayed the three gilded balls, beacons to the stranded wayfarer, even there is he, a bejeweled individual who often doles out pitiful loans on collateral two or three times more valuable than the amount loaned.

In New York pawnshops are seen with painful frequency. Hardly a block on the east side is without one, and each has its regular patrons.

The profit of the business accounts for the large number engaged in it, and this may be easily reckoned by a glance at the law which regulates the interest which may be charged. The statute reads as follows: "On sums of $150 or under, at the rate per cent. per month for the first six months and 2 per cent. per month thereafter. On sums over $150, 2 per cent. per month for the first six months and 1 per cent. per month thereafter."

No wonder "my uncle" is prosperous, is resplendent with jewels, owns houses, lots, etc. With a view to learn something of the class who enjoy the patronage of such a well known Bowery shop yesterday and I stated his object.

"If you choose to stand here in my shop for a day," said the proprietor, "you would see some queer people, with queer notions about the value of pawn-in some cases—estimate what they want me to lend money on. We have regular customers, the same as in any other business. There is one customer of mine, for instance, a man who earns good wages as a mechanic and spends his earnings in drink, who has nothing in his pocket regularly every Tuesday. For the last six months he has every Wednesday morning pawned his Sunday suit here, and as regularly redeemed it every Saturday night. He is an old chap, and although earning good wages, out of which he might lay by money each week, he persists in his visits to me.

A few nights ago a man came in here, well dressed, even handsomely dressed; he had no jewels to pledge, he said, but he wanted to get an old suit for the new one he wore and the difference in cash. I need hardly say I refused to accommodate him. This man, I found, was isolated, or, to seven an unusual one. The object poor are not our best customers. Who come from all ranks and the four points of the compass.

"We are constantly streaming into this great city an army of people, hunters of fortune, in search of employment or wealth in other channels. Failing in their quest, they are compelled to part with their watches, say, or their rings, or any other article of value for they must live.

"Then we derive great profit from a class which is not suspected of needing our assistance—high toned people who pledge their jewels generally, to tide over temporary embarrasment.

"Some, too, the sporting element among us is a source of profit. Today a bankrupt may be well heeled, as they say, and to-morrow broke, and then he comes straight way to me. In the racing season he nests with losses on a dead sure winner, and, in order to wage more war, up go his diamond rings and studs, and everything else he can fetch him money."—New York Star.

Millionaires' Coachmen.

In New York the coachmen of the days before the war, who drove the Four Hundred through a city that ran from Canal to Fourteenth Twenty-second street, were of different character from those who now hold the reins over the spirited steeds that draw the carriages of the multitude of millionaires. Wealth and magnificent mansions are fast spreading out until now they nestle under the lady branches that shade the approaches to Yonkers from an arid sun. In the old days the aristocratic family intrusted the ribbons to the colored race, but within the last twenty years the colored man has been deposed and the Englishman has taken his seat on the box; not that the colored man was a poor driver, but that he was the antithesis of anything that was "English, you know." A mania for French bonnes, French cooks and English butlers naturally spread to a desire to import the stately and portly coachman whom the American millionaires had admired during the London season on Rotten Row. It is safe to say that there is hardly a dozen of our wealthy men in this city who can compare with the time black coachman, and indeed he is fast disappearing even in the south.—New York Tribune.

A. D. Crnickshank started for New York on Wednesday on business connected with the railroad. He returns happy and joyous, we shall know that the cash is ready to build the railroad. If he returns sad and disheartened, and talks persistently about New Mexico, we will calculate that the road is a "dead duck" this year, notwithstanding Mr. Rock's concert.

Searching for Justice's Body.

EAST JORDAN, Aug. 3.—Search is being made for the body of John Justice who was drowned here yesterday in rescuing the boy Leon Bissett. His conduct is greatly praised. It appears that Justice's brother older than himself is the sail boat who was about to endeavor to rescue the younger Bissett when Justice stepped him and jumped into the water himself. He was a mile from the west shore, and the skiff came out from the shore, and Justice actually put the boy in the skiff just before going down himself not to raise. Justice was a single man, but the support of an aged mother, who is thus suddenly bereft of son and sustenance. He was an industrious worker and very much esteemed by sailing on the lake. The water of the lake is very cold, and it is thought that he must have been taken with cramps.

ENCOURAGING ACTIVITY.

Prospects for the Immediate Construction of the Railroad.

On Tuesday Charlevoix was thrown into a fever of excitement by the appearance on our streets of Mr. Thomas Rock, the railroad contractor, and the announcement that the contracts for the clearing and grading between Charlevoix and Petoskey were signed, and that work would begin on Aug. 16th.

Mr. Rock engaged board and rooms for a number of men at the hotels, and said that by Aug. 20 there would be 300 men in Charlevoix to work on the grade.

While we have every confidence that the last detail has been agreed to, and that the road will surely be built at once, we shall not bring out our roosters until we hear from New York. Most of our people recollect that Mr. Rock once before had a contract, and it was announced with a flourish of trumpets that work would begin in sixty days. This time it is ten days, so we shall not have long to wait. The members of Messrs. Cherrie, Cruickshank, and Meech, with the syndicate in New York who are to furnish the cash, will determine definitely and finally whether the contract with Mr. Rock means business now or at some time in the future. Until we hear from them, we can only wait and hope that everything is right, that the cash is ready to work with, and that work will actually begin on Aug. 16th, as has been announced.

The officers of the road refused to authorize any statement for publication in this paper beyond the fact that the contract with Mr. Rock was agreed to, and they expected it would be signed in Chicago this week. Messrs. Cherrie, Cruickshank, and Meech expected to complete the negotiations in New York so that Mr. Rock could begin work on Aug. 16th, as agreed. Further than this we have only rumors and street talk.

J. B. Mulliken, general manager of the C. & W. M. railroad is reported to have said that after reaching Traverse City, the road would be pushed through to the straits of Mackinaw going east of Torch Lake and down into Elk Rapids, north via. Charlevoix to Petoskey. If this is the purpose of the management, the D. C. & E. can realize on their franchise from Charlevoix to the straits.—Petoskey Record.

Pertinent to this, we are reminded that an officer of the D. C. & E. road recently stated that present negotiations of that company are with a syndicate who already own and operate an important road out of Detroit; that they are anxious to get to the straits; that when built, Charlevoix would be on a through line from Detroit to Mackinac. We are also reminded that some weeks ago, C. & W. M. officials visited Charlevoix to secure the situation and prospects here. These items, with some others that cannot be published without a violation of confidence, give us reason to believe that so much of the survey of the D. C. & E. as can be used (possibly from Bellaire to Mackinac) will be used by the C. & W. M., and that the construction of the same will be pushed as fast as it can be economically.

We are not prepared to say the road will be running through to Mackinac before Jan 1, 1890, but would not be at all surprised to see it in the work between Baldwin and Traverse City is now progressing, but there is no reason why the work between Traverse City and Petoskey cannot also progress at the same time, even to laying the ties. In all human probability Charlevoix will have one railroad before the close of the coming spring next year. We are not now prepared to assert that we will have two railroads by that time.

That Talkative Barber.

Clothes may make the man, but they have everything to do with his general appearance. Enter a barber shop any day when the chairs are full, scan the heads of the customers as they lay back in the chairs, with the towel and duster close up to their chins, form your idea of the appearance of the man when he shall have stepped out on the floor, and in nineteen cases out of twenty you will be surprised. In the first place all idea of his size is hidden under the duster. In recognizing a friend you do so as much by his size and manner as you do his features. You readily recognize an acquaintance from a rear view as he walks on ahead of you. In the barber shop you will see a man with a massive No. 8 head, and when he steps down you are as much shocked to find that it is placed on a 5 foot 6 inch body as to learn that the boyish 6½ head in the next chair is on top of a 6 foot body. You will see a noble, high browed head that you are sure must belong to some distinguished man, and you are knocked out when a policeman or the engineer from next door in his blue flannel shirt comes from under the covers. Another thing that amuses me is the failure of friends to recognize each other while in the barber chairs, and that happens twenty times a day; the recognition only following when one or the other comes off the chair.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Crooked Eels.

An elderly man sat placidly on the string piece of a far downtown pier, contemplatively waiting for a bite at the other end of his fishing line. It came, and the old fellow pulled out a very "wriggly" eel. "What'm I goin' to do with 'im?" he echoed to a strange's query. "I'm goin' to make 'im lay still and keep alive, too." Grasping his squirming prize with a well seasoned hand, he laid him out perfectly straight along a crack in the wharf flooring. Then he let him go. The eel's eyes had a strained, intense look in them, as if he was doing his level best to squirm, but not a quiver passed along his rigid length.

"Ever see a machine get on a 'dead center?" asked the wise old fisherman. "That's what ails the eel. Ye never see an eel straight in the water. No, nor ye never will. He's got to keep crooked, or rather he can't get straight. When he is he's paralyzed. One set of muscles pulls just as even against the other, so he can't move."

An hour later the stranger passed that way again. The eel still lay there, feeling, no doubt, like the Tun under the mountain. The old man gave the eel a push, so that the straight line was broken. The eel began instantly to wriggle harder than he did on the end of the line just out of the water. "How did you learn that trick?" the stranger asked. "I always knew it," was all the old man could tell.—Philadelphia Press.

A Magnetic Field.

If, while the electrical current is flowing through a wire, a delicately poised magnetic needle be carried about it, the needle will tend to place itself at right angles to the general direction of the wire. It may be easily shown that the region about the wire is a magnetic region, commonly called a magnetic field. In order to do this, the wire may be made to pass vertically through a sheet of smooth paper which is held in a horizontal position. If, then, while the current is passing, some iron filings be sprinkled over the paper, and the latter be gently tapped, so to assist the movement of the filings, they will arrange themselves in concentric circles about the wire.

When the current is interrupted the region about the wire is no longer a magnetic field, but it may be restored as often as the current is renewed. This simple experiment proves the fact that at the foundation of many electrical appliances with which we are familiar. The magnetic field about a single conducting wire is, however, generally too feeble to serve for many purposes for which it would otherwise be useful.—Professor C. F. Brackett in Scribner's.

Dogs at the Table.

One hardly expects to see a bulldog sitting on a chair, with a napkin tied around his neck, at a table in a fashionable restaurant. But the other night the satisfied guests at a restaurant in this city beheld this very sight. The dog, a fine animal of correct behavior, took his place at this fashion with his master and some other gentlemen, and it was noticeable that the waiter showed him great respect.

Upon inquiry you will find, if it just now the very proper thing, if you are anxious to keep up to the jeunesse doree, to take your English bulldog with you wherever you go, and to treat him exactly as if he were your equal in intelligence and position. Unfortunately it cannot be certain how the dogs regard this fashion.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

KEEGAN'S IMPORTED CIGAR

BY ANON. IN ANTE.

They gave a ball at McSweeney's,
Mike Keegan he smoked a cig-ar,
Mike Keegan he smoked a cig-ar,
Mike Keegan he smoked a cig-ar.
Oh, say I laugh, but wasn't it crack,
From the way that Keegan smoked it,
You'd a thought that he owned a stack.

He smoked it out in the hallway,
Will a gust from the hall blew back,
And—"The wind blew through his whiskers,"
Making of them a total wreck,
Although he smoked no whiskers,
But "will he smoke?" he did again,
Before Keegan will smoke a pipe.

Misses Keegan said, "McSweeney,
Mary Ann's put tad sugs in the duff,"
Mike Keegan he smoked a cig-ar,
And he took another long puff,
Then some one said, "The dog was baking,"
"Which others, "A rat had died there,"
But Keegan, he kept on smoking
At the foot of the big hall stair.

They ap-peared a con-sid-ble
To dishonor Dan and assault,
Who got onto Keegan's smoking,
For we soon hear an awful yell,
Then something with a shriking
Came down the stair like a bag of dump,
Whisper, We found old Dan—dead,
Sent Jay—he had swallowed Keegan's stump.

WITH CRIES OF DISMAY.

BY T. W.

I looked every inch a fool as he sat there under the evergreens, behind a large monument in the cemetery. His little face was clothed in a pair of overalls reaching below the knees and a woven coat of the Prince Albert variety, evidently the property of a person several sizes larger than the wearer, while on his shapely feet was a pair of the biggest and heaviest cowhide shoes—a pair which had been an heirloom in the family for many a generation.

A huge bulge under his coat and in the vicinity of the breast-pocket was well calculated to suggest ideas of piratic booty, bombs, daggers, and all those weird and romantic things, but when a gust of wind blew the coat aside the said bulge proved to be a choice assortment of fiction wrapped in a drab novel, which bore a gaudy front-piece and the breezy caption, "The Roaring Ranger of Rattlesnake Ranch."

In his hand he held a copy of "Old Electricity," and while one eagle eye nightly devoured its contents, the other wandered off across the cemetery, to where a fleshy dame, in a calico wrapper, with sleeves rolled above the elbows, furnished a large sapling in one hand, while she hunted excitedly under the trees and behind the stones, wildly gesticulating and occasionally delivering, in a very loud and high-pitched voice, the following touching appeal:

"Lemuh Calvin Baxter Smith, you young skeesics, come here to me this minute, or if I don't warm you up good, sass, you young rascal! Calvin Baxter, you scalawag, d'you hear me?"

He heard, but his fine lip curled as he arose, took a huge quid of tobacco from his jaws, and carefully plastered it over the mouth of the graven figure on the monument, while he muttered in scornful tones:

"Yes, I hear, Mariar Jane, and if you can trail the 'Lightning Detective' to his lair before he finishes this novel, you're welcome to apply your bludgin, to the pants of his breeches." And he resumed his reading.

Suddenly, however, a howl, or rather a shriek, rent the air, so dismal and unearthly that he sprang to his feet and turned to fly, with a vague idea that the spirits of the dead were charging down upon him for the purpose of driving him from out their territory. But, turning to look back, he discovered the cause of the strange noise.

The exploring party had made a rather sudden turn, to look behind a monument of unusual size, when her foot caught, and, with an awful shriek, she fell. And great was the fall thereof. The stick was twisted out of her hand and lodged in the top of one of the evergreens.

"Ow-ow-ow-kr-r-r-r oneh! Oh, Lordy!" howled the fleshy dame, and she limped off to the house. The youth resumed his reading.

Presently he heard footsteps approaching. It was two gentlemen, and they were engaged in animated conversation. He listened, and the first words he heard set his blood on fire.

"You have heard of the great robbery, I suppose?" one of the men was saying.

"Yes; when was it?"

"Just this morning. I read a long account of it in the papers. One hundred thousand dollars' worth of goods. We will get later accounts in this evening's papers."

"Where was it?"

"At Chi——"

Just at this instant the gentlemen espied the detective lying upon the ground in the attitude of listening with "Old Electricity" at his feet and the roll of profusely illustrated literature peeping ominously from under his coat.

When he saw that his lair had been penetrated he sprang to his feet, breathless with excitement, and confronted the astonished gentlemen with the inquiry:

"Where was the robbery? Was it at Tommy Graves'?" (Tommy Graves' was the largest store in the village.)

The detective man was naturally of an obliging disposition, and, observing the great interest taken in the case, he replied:

"Yes, at Tommy Graves'. One hundred thousand dollars' worth of goods, and his beautiful grand-daughter, Miss Grace, in the bargain."

The youth trembled in his excitement. But remembering that the "Roaring Ranger" did not tremble, even when covered by the weapons of his enemies, he made a desperate effort to control his nerves.

The two gentlemen passed on their way, talking and chuckling in a knowing manner.

The youth cleared the fence with a bound which would have astonished even the "Roaring Ranger," and which certainly would have struck terror to the heart of his deadly enemy, "Bleary-Eyed Bill," the fiend who abducted the beautiful Emmeralda. Crouching like a tiger, he cautiously wended his way homeward, for he well knew that the indomitable Maria Jane was ironing clothes by the kitchen window, with a freshly cut "goad" lying conveniently by, and her eyes roaming over the outlying premises for a fleshly image of departed head.

He crept—almost crawled—around the house to the apple tree which grew under his bed-room window, climbed the apple tree, and crept in at the window.

Safely inside, he made straight for the rag-bag, which lay in a corner, plunged into its capacious depths, and succeeded, after some difficulty, in bringing forth a small wooden box which contained a motley assortment of goods. The first thing to attract attention was a thirty-two-caliber revolver, in a very dilapidated condition, minus both sides of the handle and the cylinder pin, and having, in place of the latter useful appendage, a large and very stiff wire, which protruded an inch or two beyond the muzzle of the weapon, ending in a ring.

Among other things the box also contained a bowie-knife, a small surgicing glass, false mustachs and whiskers and several wigs.

For half an hour he busied himself with the contents of this box and some old clothing, secured by a stealthy trip to the attic. Then, stealthily as before, he descended the tree, crept to the barn, and ascended to the loft.

It was a grotesque figure that slipped down from the loft at the hour of nine, and, with a cautious glance around him, started uptown. On his head, covered by a wig of gray hair, was a slouch hat with several holes in the crown. The coat was a cutaway, and rather large for the wearer, while the trousers and shoes were the ones worn through the day. On his face was a fierce, black mustache, and a long, flowing gray beard, and as the wind blew the loose rest slightly out of place, it disclosed a very bright piece of tin, the bottom of an oyster can, on which had been laboriously worked, in sprawling characters, the following:

"Old Thunderbolt, the Lightning Detective."

As he stepped into the street he did not notice two dark forms in the doorway of his father's abode, that started slightly at first, and then slyly followed him. Their actions, however, would not be hard to explain.

A search had been instituted by his parents, and, the father of the family chancing to question the gentleman with whom our hero had had the conversation in the cemetery, they had started in on the trail of the detective, and, having spotted him, they proceed to shadow him and get on to his game.

"I must start in on the trail at the point where the robbery and abduction were committed," muttered "Old Thunderbolt," as we shall hereafter designate our hero. "Once started in on the trail, I will not eat or sleep until I have tracked the villains to their lair! And as he spoke he had a faint recollection of "Old Electricity," or some other detective, having once used the same words.

Gradually the store and residence of Tommy Graves hove in sight, and, as he came nearer, his eagle eye scanned the premises with lightning-like rapidity for signs of life. Dim lights were shining from various windows in the second story, but everything was quiet.

He tried the gate, but it was locked. However, he soon climbed to the top of the fence, and, with an agile bound, his lithe form landed in the yard. Fortune seemed to favor the detective. He was not disturbed, and going to the back door, of the store, he began the search for clews.

The search was not very long or difficult. The eyes of the detective roved about like those of a hawk, and soon lit upon a button—the regulation clew—a small and dirty shirt-button, but a button all the same; and in these days of romance and adventure, it is often, indeed, that life, fortune, and all depend upon a button.

As the detective examined the clew, a fierce exclamation escaped him, and a terrible, relentless look came into his fine blue eyes as he hissed through his clenched teeth:

"Aye, villains, you may well tremble, for the 'Avenger' is on your track. The chase has commenced, and I will follow you to the end of the earth. I will never cease until the innocent is saved and have dragged you to—"

The detective felt a powerful grasp on his collar and pants, and he was hurled through the air, with terrific relentless force. His iron nerve availed him naught against the powerful enemy who had caught him in that terrible grasp, and he was hurled violently to the earth a very escape him, a terrible wail so loud and despairing that it must have made "Bleary-Eyed Bill" turn green with envy.

All the tom-cats in the neighborhood, with cries of dismay, and tails standing in the air, sought more congenial climes; a frightful din came from the hen-house, and, horrible to relate, there were sounds of surprised exclamations from within the residence of Tommy Graves. The whole family turned out to see what was wrong, while the shocked detective heard Miss Grace herself exclaim, in a voice of singled horror and disgust:

"Why, grandfather, was that ugly little rag-muffin trying to break into the store?"

Some conversation among those assembled followed, but the detectives heard it not. His great nerve was dazed and bewildered, his iron nerve crushed.

Presently the detective's father approached him and seized an ear. The gentleman before mentioned did the same, and together they dragged him homeward with very unfeeling grasps.

Yet, in spite of all his reverses, the indomitable spirit of the detective was not entirely broken. He still retained possession of his terrible weapon, and he managed to keep it firmly in his grasp in this way, mechanically:

"Halt, villains! I've got you covered!"

But at the same instant an extra jerk on the ear, prompted by his father, sent the weapon spinning from his hand. As it struck the ground it exploded, the impressed cylinder, at the same time flying in one direction, the cylinder in another, and the revolver in a third, while the hammer, loosened by some internal convulsion, rattled helplessly in its place.

"Eh! What does this mean? The little rascal has got a gun!" exclaimed the father, and he gathered up the revolver and carefully deposited it in his pocket. Again, with a meaning light in his eye, he seized the detective's arm and the latter was marched on in perfect silence. The paternal abode was reached, the gentleman friend bade them good-night, and the detective was left alone with his father.

But the look on the latter's face only became more stern and determined, his grasp firmer and more relentless.

As he dragged "Old Thunderbolt," hopeless and dispirited into the house, he cried, in a voice of thunder:

"Maria Jane, where is the paddle?"

Maria Jane brought the implement of torture with alacrity. It was an ugly-looking weapon, fully three feet long, and the blade at least six inches wide.

"Old Thunderbolt" was led to his room in the same manner as before, and his father took a chair. Seeing pretty well what was coming, the detective uttered a despairing cry.

A malicious, almost fiendish smile played for an instant over the face of the stern parent. Then the detective was again caught up by the collar and pants and thrown across his knee, face down. The bludgeon was raised, poised for an instant in the air, and—

Over the harrowing scene that followed we gently draw the veil

When He Left Off.

They were walking in front of a tall building that was undergoing repairs. The sun shone vertically upon the crowded thoroughfare and seemed to drink up eagerly the moisture from the water-soaked pavement.

"Grindstone," said Kiljordan, "is this——"

But the question was not completed. A fragment of brick from the top of the building fell upon his head, and without a groan he fell to the ground insensible. He was taken to his home and for weeks he lay beref of sense and motion. His friend watched faithfully by his bedside. A consultation of surgeons was held, and it was decided that an operation must be performed to relieve the brain from the pressure of a fractured portion of the skull. "This was done, and the eager watchers were gladdened by the announcement that the delicate task had been successfully accomplished. Grindstone leaned over the prostrate man and waited breathlessly for the first gleam of returning consciousness. It came. With a long, quivering breath Kiljordan opened his eyes, and the first words that had passed his lips for many a day broke the painful silence of the room. In a quick, distinct voice he said:

"——hot enough for you?"

How Peleg Chandler Downed Ben Butler.

An anecdote illustrative of Mr. Chandler's character is told at the expense of Gen. Butler. When he was quite a young man, having but recently entered practice, he was called to defend a tenant in ejectment. You be can's ejected, had purchased a piece of real-estate, in which a woman claimed a right to a portion of the rentals. A tenant paid his rent to her and Butler took no pains to conceal the case was quite a celebrated one. Choate had been in it and several of the distinguished lawyers of the day. Yet still Butler had the best of it, and the utmost ill of the opposing lawyers had been able to do was to obtain postponements from time to time upon various pretexts. At length the case was to come up again. The defendant's lawyers had given it up, and as a last resort she came to young Chandler. He appeared in the defense. Gen. Butler had tried every methods in court are as well known as the man himself, and he tried them on the young man. But for once he met his match. Those who remember the occasion will be able to recall to mind the remembrance of Chandler's thirteen "stories of the cock-eyed man," which he poured, one after another, relentlessly upon Butler's devoted head, and, as the story goes, the poor old fellow, in fairly wiped the floor with him. The judge, jury, and spectators, fell into a tumultuous uproar of laughter, which no officers even attempted to quell. At the close of his remarks Mr. Chandler gravely, although his talk had not so much as touched the case, asked for a continuance and got it.

The next day the tenant of Mr. Chandler's client, an apothecary by profession, called upon the lawyer and asked him what he meant, as Mr. Butler came to eject him by force.

"Killkin," said Mr. Chandler gravely.

"What!" ejaculated the astonished apothecary.

"Shoot him through the head," insisted the lawyer.

Mr. Handler reached for a pen and wrote:

"If Benjamin F. Butler attempts to eject you from the premises occupied by you, my advice is to shoot him through the head."

The next day Mr. Butler appeared with a posse, prepared to eject the apothecary. The latter showed him his instructions.

"Look!" said Mr. Butler, throwing down the paper.

"If you should shoot me you would hang."

"That is no affair of mine," returned the apothecary. "The advice of my counsel is to shoot you if you molest me, and I shall do it," he continued, with blood in his eye, as he produced a big seven-shooter.

"I—I'd I don't believe you would be fool enough to shoot me," said Butler, as he turned and left the shop.

He at once called upon Mr. Chandler and effected a settlement of the long contested case, granting to the woman a share in the rents which she claimed.—Boston Advertiser.

MORE ROBINSON CRUSOES.

Tough Experience of Castaways on a Caribbean Island.

Nine shipwrecked sailors lived for over three weeks, April 1, 1894, in terrible struggle to get ashore after their bark had foundered on a coral reef they lost all their clothing. For two days they were without drink, but they finally obtained, by digging, a small supply of very brackish water. They had no means of kindling a fire, and were compelled to eat their food raw. They found a few cocoanuts, caught a few birds, and a number of sea crabs, and eked out their meager diet with some little roots like the common wild radish. Their story is all the more interesting because the adventure occurred in the West Indies, within a short distance of the large town of Kingston, Jamaica, where it would hardly be believed that shipwrecked sailors could suffer so long without succor. In fact, relief did not come until after two of the crew had reached Jamaica on a raft.

The bark Gettysburg, of Aberdeen, was on her way from Mobile to Pensacola, when, on a dark and stormy night, she struck on a reef outside the Morant Keys, and in a few minutes sank in deep water. Seven of the crew were drowned, but Captain Stewart and eight men, after clinging to the wreckage until daylight, succeeded in getting ashore. Half-starved, terribly blistered and burned by the hot sun, and some of them so weakened by their struggles in the sea as to be helpless, they crawled into the shade of a bush, where they spent the next three days in a most pitiable condition. There is no telling how long their sufferings would have continued, if they had not at last succeeded in making a frail raft out of two of the oars and some of the masts.

Out of an old pieced bagging, and lots of hard work and a mattress that had washed ashore, they contrived to rig up a sail, for their boat. It was just three weeks after they landed on the Island that Jones and Allen, two sailors, started for Jamaica. The provisions they carried were all the cocoanuts that were left on the island, a piece of pork that had washed up on the beach, and two pints of water in old bottles they had found on the Island. The raft sank eighteen inches below the water in the middle, and at the ends it was slightly elevated above the surface. They were able to keep it afloat, and during the forty-eight hours required to sail thirty miles to Jamaica they were scarcely up to the knees in their waists. Landing near Morant Bay, they were picked up by a party from exhaustion and taken to Kingston, where they were skinny and dead. Relief was promptly sent to their comrades, and the whole party were landed in Kingston.

Slang and Its Origin.

As much may be said of slang words and phrases as to their origin. When they all could be traced back they can be. The word "blade" is without admitted genealogy, but it was thrown for expressing the peculiarities of the class of people to whom it was applied. The word "chestnut," as describing a threadbare joke, story, or trick, "filled a longer and more direct line." Its path lay through the stage. The phrase, "in the soup," has become a proverbial one, and conveying the idea of defeat, or failure, or collapse, it must remain with us. The phrase, "to cut one's stick," conveying the idea of defeat, or failure, or collapse, it must remain with us. The phrase, "to cut one's stick," has been removed. The last obstacle has been removed.

A few days ago a fond mother noticed that her little six-year-old son visited a particular corner in the garden quite often, and asked him the reason. Going to where he was stooping one day, she saw him examining a feather he had pulled out of the ground, to see if it had growed. His mother inquired his object in planting the quill, when the youngster replied: "I'm trying to learn how to raise chickens as well as anybody."

Red Hair.

The prejudice against red hair is both ancient and widespread. For centuries the popular mind throughout Europe has associated hair of this unlucky color with untrustworthiness and deceit. An old Latin "Collection of Proverbs," by Henry Bebel, published in Germany in 1511, has the following: "Haro breves humiles vitii raffesque fideles." (Proud are the short, and untrustworthy the of humble.) The Italians have a milder saying: "Capelli rossi, o tutto fuoco, o tutto neve." (Red hair, either all fire or all softness.) There is an old French rhyme dating from the seventeenth century, which says:

Homme roux et femme barbue
De trente pas fuis le salut,
Car le diable, en personne, portant
Tout ces signes a vu le jour.

(Salute a red-haired man or bearded woman at 30 feet off with three stones in thy fist to defend thee in thy need). The same sentiment of dislike and distrust is found continually in our own older literature. It did not always extend to women, whose writers on vulgar errors occasionally deplored the prejudice, and a Gascon writer and soldier of the seventeenth century, Cyrano de Bergerac, the author of various immoral and satirical pieces, boldly praised and glorified the despised color. His work on the "States and Empires of the Sun" was translated into English, and in it he says: "A blue head covered with red hair is nothing else but the sun in the midst of his rays, yet many speak ill of it, because few have the honor to be so." And, again, that flaxen hair belonged to "some of them are unfaithful but between both, he says, is the neutral tint, "Where without a flaxen or red-haired men hath lodged virtue, so their flesh is much more delicate, their blood more pure, their spirits more active, and consequently, their intellect more penetrating, more like to be under stood and accepted as its plain essence requires, is an abbreviation of the gambling phrase, "it goes as it lies," indicating that a bet on a card is to stand until it is finally decided for or against. The congenial phrase, "that's the straight," has a similar origin. And this slang, so originated, has almost universally a wealth and abundance, an aptness and poignancy of meaning that dictionary words do not possess and cannot convey to the mind.

The North Carolina Butcher's Wife.

Redding Cupp was known in a remote wide in the mountain country around Hillsboro as a butcher. No killing could properly take place unless Cupp was there. He was tall, powerful, red-haired, and cross-eyed. His principal costume was a red flannel shirt and a pair of butternut pants tucked into the tops of enormous cow-hide boots. His wife was nearly as tall and heavy as himself. She was very experienced religion, and with some fifty others of both sexes went down to the branch point for baptism. The minister was short and undersized, but he got along all right until he came to Sis Cupp. They waded out into the water hand in hand, and she was up to her waist, while the parson had to stand on his neck and almost floating off his feet.

The minister went through the usual formula, wound up with "I baptize you, Sister Cape, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," and made an effort to duck the convert. She stood like a rock, but the pastor missed his footing and got a mouthful of water.

Again he essayed it.

"Sister Cape, when I say the word you must let yourself fall back into the water and not resist."

But the good woman planced over her shoulder and didn't like the looks of the pond. When the word came she stood like a telegraph-pole, while the minister nearly drowned himself in his endeavors to have her properly baptized in the usual way. It took great considerably worked up.

Redding Cupp was a silent witness of the continually which his wife was bringing upon his good name. At last he got up and waded out through the pond, plump, plump, plump. Ranging alongside the couple, he caught his wife by the neck and waist and growled out:

"Give the word when you are ready, pastor. She's hell for ter throw."—Washington Post.

Against the Laws of Nature.

Stranger—I say, Johnnie, is it against the law to catch fish in that pond?

Johnnie—Yes, sir.

"But there's a police office, fishing there now. He wouldn't do so if it was against the law."

"Well, I don't care. I may not be against the State law to catch fish in that pond, but it's against the laws of nature, for there isn't a blessed fish in it."

The Poor Man's Fishing.

It is all well enough to transplant the finest varieties of the gamy fishes to afford increased sport to the professional anglers and to cultivate carp for private fish ponds. But the native fish, such as the wall-eyed pike, striped bass, pickerel, yellow perch, and even the sunfish and catfish, which have afforded sport and healthful food to the inhabitants of the State for two centuries, are all worthy of protection and propagation. They are the fish of the common people, those who can not afford expensive journeys to the seashore or great lakes to do their fishing. Every stream, lake, reservoir and millpond in the State should be full of these fish, so that when the farmer and the farmer's boy and hired man walk a little rest from their arduous labors, with some sport thrown in, they can find it near home.

The boys of a half century ago got more genuine sport out of fishing for sunfish with a piece of twine for a line and a bent pin for a hook than the most skillful adult angler of to-day who catches bass or muskallonge with the finest modern tackle. Why should not the boys of the present and future generations be given the same chance? And the old-time farmer and mechanic who utilized a cloudy day by catching a mess of catfish or perch from the nearby waters secured a much-needed relaxation from hard work, besides furnishing themselves and families with a healthful variation in their ordinary diet. Shouldn't the farmers and mechanics and their boys be thought of still in the efforts that are now being made to preserve the fishing waters of the United States?

Among Errors Euinous to Health.

One of the most mischievous and common errors of modern times arises from the use of purgatives. Such medicines if well chosen, are generally resorted to, are cathartic, but many persons select the worst, by from one to the other, and empty their bowels, in an occasion, or their utility has ceased. To establish on a permanent basis a regular condition of the bowels, the finest alterative is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a vegetable origin, and a safe anodyne for those objectionable drugs, calomel and blue pill; it does not gripe or sicken the bowels, but gently stimulates them, and it not only reforms irregularity of the habit of body, but remedies the disorder and inactivity of the liver and stomach, which usually accompany it. Dyspepsia, biliousness, fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney and nervousness are removed by the Bitters.

She Was Bound to Save That Dress.

During the heaviest of the rain recently, two men, who were rushing along Baltimore street, found themselves behind a woman who presented a very odd appearance as the result of saving so much of her outfit as possible. She had turned her dress quite up around her waist, exposing her white petticoat from waist almost to hem, and the rain had made it well nigh transparent; and in this fix, with a handkerchief over her bonnet, she was rushing along to the destruction of her toilet. Said one, "Did the artistic of a woman?" asked one of the other. "The rich dress, of course," "Now, suppose that to save my trousers I should take them off and hurry up home in my drawers, wouldn't the community be shocked? Yet I should be just as much modest as her ladyship."—Baltimore Free Press.

"Yes, sir, sir?"

Odd Sayings.

As we were well seated at dinner recently, we heard a dinner horn, blown by one of the neighbors. I remarked that some good lucky little girl not yet four years old, got down from the table after dinner, went and looked out of the window and watched the cattle, pretty soon she said "cows with horns on make an awful noise, don't they mamma?" One day the hired man said to her teasingly, "I'll put your pups in the water when I go down town, then you won't have any pups." She, nothing daunted, answered quickly, "we'll buy another one then." She long ago learned to say "now I lay me" with help, and when she heard the older children learning "Our father" wished to say that too. She proceeded bravely until she reached "forgive us our trespasses" and said instead "give us our dresses" which we probably uppermost in her mind.

Wide Awake.

Wide awake for August is an upper number, full of things to be done out-of-doors; geologizing (by Prof. Frederick Starr), boating (by Mary Guiney) and the making of wildflower books (by Miss Harris)—it is a pity that the bread-making, which, Mrs. White describes as the Boston Public schoolgirls do it, could not be carried on out-of-doors also. The number is largely written by travelers and sight-seers. Mrs. George Fremont describes her "Camping near the Giant Trees" in the early California days. Miss Risley Seward, "In the Meadows at Trianon," writes of a somewhat peculiar visit she made to the famous playground of Marie Antoinette and her Court, with a glimpse of those great Frenchmen, Thiers and Labouliaye. Mrs. Humphrey in "Queen Mary's Canal-Garden" gives an account of a day she spent last year on the island of Inchmahome where Mary, Queen of Scots abode for a time when she was a little girl. "Fishing in Tweed and Yarrow," with its delicate description of the historic river scenery, is a most readable fishing paper by Andrew Lang and will set all anglers wild young or old. Then there is a touching jubilation ballad by Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford of the sad poet journeyer, John Leonard Payne, the author of "Home, Sweet Home."

The story element is of fine quality. In the Pepper serial by Margaret Sidney a mysterious pleasure is hinted at for bonnie Polly Pepper, and in "Sybil Fair's Fairness" young Mr. Harvard turns out pretty well, after all. "Gui Balsa, Father of Roses," one of the best of the folktales of Hungary, is given by John C. Carpenter. "How Long Pond Ran Away," by John Marshall, describes a disaster in Vermont many years ago singularly like the Conemaugh flood. "Bin" is a charming story, sweet and piquant and pathetic, by Grace Denio Litchfield. "Tom Fairfax and the Two Answers" is an amusing political story by Eugene M. Camp. The poems of the number are by Edith M. Thomas, Joel Benton, Mrs. Whitco-Stone and Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spafford. "Men and Things" is full of bright anecdote and talk. "The Court Calendar," by L. J. Bridgman, is very amusing this month.

In the Ratching.

A contributor to "L'Illustration" has in a series of articles given an interesting account of the interior of the German parliament. Speaking of its general appearance, he says: In a moderately sized room are gathered specimens of all the various races of great Germany; the Bavarians and the monumental Rhinelanders with beards as in Lohengrin; the pure bred Prussians, squat and smug like Richter, who keep by themselves, and pass without looking either to right or to left; the gentleman from Silesia, big and bony, with blazing red beard and the air of an aldermanic captain of militia, or of an English yeoman, fond of foxes, and officer of volunteers.

There is no lack of uniforms in the group, and no lack of overcoats folded and held on the arm—overcoats bourgeois, bureaucratic and professorial. Still more numerous are the collarless ecclesiastical coats worn alike by Protestant pastors and members of the Catholic Centre. The members for the conquered provinces are conspicuous spots in this crowd. Antoine, despite his great military mustachios would not be taken by the greenest or most short sighted reporter for a captain of the Landwehr, and the Parisian vest of young Baron Zorn of Bulach is in sharp contrast with that of his brother sportsman of Brandenburg or the Vieile Marcine.

The personal portraits are all exceedingly good, though there is nothing new said about Prince Bismarck and others, who have been described ad nauseam. But the following description of Herr Windthorst is clever and life like: The figure of a goose, the long neck of a child, great blue spectacles which shelter the remains of used up eyes, a large mouth with a satirical twist. Such is Herr Windthorst, the pearl of his party, the most indoubtable parliamentary tactician, the only adversary Prince Bismarck has been unable to overcome, and with whom he has often had to treat on equal terms. He is not a thunderbolt of eloquence. From his toothless gums comes a feeble voice, which would not be able to travel past the tribune or the bench from which he speaks, were it not that the insatiable curiosity which this resourceful spirit provokes establishes in the assembly a perfect silence as soon as he arises.

The skill and irony which at each step shine in his oratory make every one forget that this thick set little man, with his wooden voice and monotonous gesture, is the very opposite of an orator. It is his mind which has held together for eighteen years without visible change, and even after the religious peace, that paradoxical Catholic party built of elements so heterogeneous—great conservative and feudal lords, little clergy with democratic tendencies and Socialists.—London Globe.

The Latest New York Story.

The latest beggarly vagary comes from New York, of course, where a party coming from the theatre was stopped by a ragged individual with a small kitten in his arms. He opened the conversation immediately and said:

"Gents, maybe you think I am going to spar you for money, but I ain't. I am not hungry or thirsty and have a place to sleep, but I have no cash. I want a few pennies, not for myself, but to buy some milk for this poor little starving cat, which I found crying in this park."

The party was for a moment stunned, but amid roars of laughter a purse of nearly a dollar was collected and given to the guardian of the kitten.

A New York dime museum possesses a lecturer who slings oratory at the audiences in this fashion:

"This, ladies and gentlemen, is Cingalee, the sword and spike walker. She is a native of Lucknow, India, and walks with her bare, naked and tender flesh upon the glistening, keen cutting, bristling, incisive, penetrating, needle like, horrible edges of quivering, wavering, trembling swords, and the jagged, pointed, tearing, lacerate, crosscutting, fearful, frightful, horrifying, spearsticked, tripointed, quadrupoint, deep sinking, death wounding, feet ruining spikes, dancing and rolling on a bed of bare and pointed carpet tacks, and running a race on glistening cimeters."

Statistics.

Lace neck cloths, carefully arranged, were worn by men of fashion up to 1698. In the continental war against Louis XIV, the style altered in a curious way. At the battle of Steinkirk, when the brigade of Bourbonais was flying before the onset of the allies, there was no time for foppery and the finest gentlemen of the court came squaring to the front with their sash cravats in utter disorder. It became, therefore, the fashion of the swells of Paris to wear round their necks lengths of fine lace, studiously disarranged. The collars were called "Steinkirks" and remained long the mode.—Chicago Times.

WONDERFUL MUSIC.

MUSICAL ART, ARTISTS AND EDUCATION IN THE WEST.

Immense International Band Convention in September—series of Unequaled Grand Concerts—Forty Famous Soloists —The Greatest Religious Gathering of the Age Coming to Detroit.

Everybody has been engraving or chromo of the spirited American painting that heralded the great American Centennial Exposition of 1876 in Philadelphia, entitled "The Spirit of '76." Everybody remembers the figure of the old Revolutionary War veteran, with his white hair streaming in the wind, stepping gallantly out on the Fourth of July, rattling the old snare drum with angular flourishes of his antique sticks —his face all alive with the fire of patriotism —supported by the old time fife and the veteran flag bearer, as they stride to the old war music down the village street in the early morning sunlight.

That picture represents the musical cultivation of the west in general before the War for the Union. In those days the village fife and drummer constituted "the band," and the village choir and cheap "singing school" furnished the musical element. The popular songs were those of Christie's minstrels, embracing the still famous and still unequaled melodies of Foster's "Way Down Upon the Swanee River," "Old Kentucky Home," "Old Dog Tray," "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground," etc., that for simplicity and pathos have never been surpassed by the common airs of any country. But low cruisty we did use to murder them!

Then came the war; and, at its close, scores of military bands, with the "SONOROUS METAL BLOWING MARTIAL AIRS," celebrated the salvation of the Republic. A wealth of new patriotic music poured over the nation from every side. Martial airs were fired by the enthusiasm of battle and victory. "Kingdom Coming," "Rally Round the Flag," "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching," "Dixie," "John Brown's Body," and that pathetic melody, favorite that still holds its undiminished popularity, "Maryland, My Maryland," were among the rich gifts of the time.

These have given the needed impetus to western musical education. There has been a WONDERFUL CHANGE IN THE LAST DECADE. Now every city and almost every village is supplied with bands, orchestras and teachers. Music scores abound. Almost well-to-do home has its piano. Music is regularly taught in the public schools.

GERMAN SANGERFESTS

are annual occurrences, at which, the most eminent artists to be obtained on this continent, including the greatest foreign celebrities, appear. But the more popular form of musical festival in which the still unsolicited multitude delight is the band contests that occur annually, at which not only really fine bands, but many good soloists on various instruments compete for honors and prizes. Opera that, in the old days, was seldom heard, and drew but a meager support, has become popularized, especially in its lighter forms. But it must be confessed that still predominates, and a really first class band tournament or contest is a great drawing card. Hitherto such tournaments have been confined to state bands, and western bands have had no opportunity to outvie and compare with the crack bands of other states and countries, which the people have heard only in concerts given by foreign organizations from abroad.

THE POPULAR TASTE FOR METAL

Now, however, at least we may expect a really international and inter-state band contest, in which the best bands of Canada, Ohio, Indiana, and other states will compete with the bands of Michigan, and will be mingled with a series of grand concerts by the most celebrated military band of the continent—Gappa's band of the most fashionable and wealthy Seventh New York regiment. This far-famed band has been engaged to give daily and nightly concerts at the buildings and grounds of the Detroit International Exposition during the great fair, September 11th to the 27th, and the management are arranging for a grand international band tournament to be opened by a combined concert by all the competing bands, led by Gappa's. Besides Gappa is engaged to bring with him, in addition to his large band, not less than to be found in the United States. These will include not only those who are well known and famous from having performed through the country with Thomas, Gilmore and other noted leaders, but also many artists of the highest skill and fame never before heard in the west. This unlisted musical treat has literally all hitherto in vogue in the west will be eclipsed, indeed, if the music-loving public do not set all their feet to marching to the wild music of bugle and drum, and the stirring strains of the cornet. Not even Buchanan's famous could stir a Scotch crowd so magnetically as a hundred bands, led by Gappa's, all playing "Marching Through Georgia" together, and following that with "Dixie" and "God Save the Queen," can satisfy an overfed and insatiable Americanus and Canadian. Outside of the musical effect, the very sight of such a multitude, so stirred, will be a wonder long to be remembered. The large cash prizes offered—$600 to the first; $300 to the second; and $200 to the third, with the Exposition medals and championship for the winners each in its particular territory—render certain a very large competition, and will make the affair a popular musical event.

FORTY OR FIFTY INSTRUMENTAL SOLOISTS

"TWENTY FIFERS AND A O'TEAM FOT"

Western artists and art lovers, and religious people, are all expectation over the personal advent of Force's splendid grand painting of which has been secured for exhibition at the Detroit International Exposition art gallery, September 11th to 27th. This large painting is one of the finest produced by any American artist of recent years. It is especially remarkable for its religious power. The shepherds receive the glad tidings, about their watchfire in the desert, watching and discussing with fervent awe, the brilliant miracle of the appearance of the Star of Bethlehem, heralding the birth of Christ. In the picture the miraculous star hangs its brilliant wonder above the central heaven, and sends strange glory to the soft atmosphere of the oriental night in the desert, mingling mystically with the light of the watchfire and the glimmer of the stars. The sheep are scattered about the landscape and around the fire, shading away into the distance. The main group is on the brilliant side of the canvas. Here three shepherds—an old man and two young men—lean against a bush.

"THE SHOUT OF THE NATIVITY,"

The old man is half prone, with his hands clasped in an attitude of wearisome and awe, listening to the discourse. The other left, on the ground, sits cross legged, his face half turned from the fire and his head bent forward as if in the act of the scene with a power that fills in each reverent face a thought of unutterable things that seems the strange scene to linger long in the memory like the vision of a holy dream.

THE NEW YORK STAR.

A Daily and Weekly Newspaper.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1889.

THE STAR BUILDING.

THE NEW YORK STAR passed into the hands of new managers in November last, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of it.

During the first months of the change the paper was enlarged, and it was so popular and so evidently the demand for it was so pronounced and so that it came to be recognized at once as

A LIVE, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the latest news of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are able and to the point. Its Democratic principles are so pronounced and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, elected in recent reorganization, selected it as the medium for placing its official action and notices before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in national, state and city; and is the advocate of no individual or clique or faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York city on Sunday. The matter selected for the literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest moral and literary character. Their united contributions each Sunday would make a volume as large as Harper's Magazine, and treating of many more subjects than any monthly magazine published ever dreamed of. The whole at a cost of only 5 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in many respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a perfect compendium of the really important news of the week carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in detail. Space is given to the class of literature most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to interest the women of the household. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but it does give him the general news of the world, leaving the home paper of each subscriber to supply his practical information on all agricultural topics. It is an excellent paper, therefore, to attain, through favorable clubs rates, along with the weekly printed in your immediate locality.

TERMS.

For the six months from July 1 to Dec. 31, 1889, we offer THE STAR, free of postage to any part of the United States and Canada, outside the limits of New York city:

A BUFFALO HORROR.

Four Children Perish Before Their Father's Eyes—Terrible Naphtha Explosion.

A Buffalo (N. Y.) dispatch says:

Bystanders near the boathouses at the foot of Ferry street heard two explosions in quick succession from the boathouse just below Smith's dock, on the Buffalo side of the Cedar Bridge, at about 3 o'clock. Immediately following the explosions the boat burst into flames. Immediately two or three persons were thrown into the water, and all were in a state of wild excitement. A young woman, Miss McLean, aged 20, picked up from the water, was badly burned. Mr. Clancy, a young man was seen standing on the boat's deck against a background of fire, when a boiler exploded a piece peculiarly adapted to the purpose of knocking the man back into the flames and burned to a crisp. John Bagenstiel, a carpenter, was another victim. The other children of Mr. Clancy, Leonard and Ethel, also perished in the flames. Another girl, whose name is not known, was burned to death, when it was reported. The cause was what is known as a naphtha launch. A young woman, who was supposed the accident was caused by the explosion of some gasoline in the launch, said: "The boat was preparing to go off on a pleasure trip, and Mr. Clancy was in the act of lighting a lamp. Miss McLean, a lady friend, was standing on the river for an excursion. Crocker himself barely escaped with his life. He is almost blind on sight. His wife has been ill for some time, and this grief will probably kill her.

Mr. Collom has been Mr. Blaisdell's attorney, and in this capacity has used Mr. Blaisdell's name on paper amounting to nearly $100,000, which he has negotiated among banks and money loaners. Collom has dealt largely in real estate and thinks he can pay back the amounts received for the forged securities.

NO IMPROVEMENT NOTED.

General Review of Business and Trade for the Past Week.

Bradstreet's, in its review of the week's trade, says:

There is no improvement in the distribution of general merchandise as compared with the preceding fortnight. Two or three large failures, apparently not due to conditions unsettling the state of trade, have brought upon careful scrutiny of credits and certainly unfavorable comment. The Western business in furs and allied lines, The Boston and Philadelphia hats are as firm as ever and consumers are asking for early instead of belated deliveries on contracts. Steel is very firm. Stock quotations show a decided reaction from prices on the city and traffic outlook, but there is neither interest nor activity in the trading. Money at New York was firmer in tone. Foreign exchange is irregular and firmer at an advance, the rate for sixty-day bankers' bills on London being the lowest recorded. Wheat has been large, with a bearish drift, notwithstanding strange values. The failure of raw sugar have been easier, but owing to the protracted stagnation in the refined market, refinery labor is again threatened with a lockout, which, if carried into effect, will mean a big strike. Cotton has been quiet, but yet prices have advanced about ½c per pound. The distributing movement in Dry Goods Business failures number 219 in the United States, against 205 last week, 257 in the week in 1893, and 183 in 1892. The total failures in the United States Jan. 1 to date are 6,420, against 4,001 in 1893.

TREASONABLE PLOT IN EGYPT.

A Widespread Conspiracy to Join the Dervishes Unexpectedly Abandoned.

The startling news comes from Tokil, Egypt, the scene of the recent overthrow of the dervish hordes, that documents have been found in the abandoned camp of Wad-el-N'jumi and upon the bodies of his chiefs which prove the existence of a widespread conspiracy, with its center among high officials of the Egyptian army and prominent Egyptian families in Cairo itself. The invasion of Wad-el-N'jumi was to have been followed by wholesale treason on the part of the Egyptian army. Just why the traitors at the last moment abandoned the brave dervish leader to his fate is not yet clear. General Grenfell is returning to Cairo. The campaign is over. A body of Egyptians was left at Sarras, and cavalry are in pursuit of the one emir who survived the battle. He is lurking in the hills above Bellana with a force of 200 men.

THE KENTUCKY ELECTION.

Democrats Elect Their Candidate for Treasurer by an Increased Majority.

Returns from the Kentucky election for State Treasurer show a Democratic victory. Stephen C. Sharp, of Lexington, the present Treasurer, was nominated for re-election. The Democratic counties, so far as heard from, show an increase in him over the majority given Burkner in 1887. There have been some surprising victories for Republican candidates for the Legislature, but this is due in all cases to local causes. In Republican counties, where ex-Senator Colson, the Republican nominee for Treasurer, was expected to make heavy gains, there has been rather a decrease. Louisville gives Sharp 2,500 majority, and the State probably 25,000. The vote for a convention to revise the constitution probably will show a sufficient majority to call the convention.

At Atsugi and in the neighborhood on the 19th ult. 565 houses were either washed away or knocked down, and twenty people drowned. At Hita, on the same date, 20 houses were washed away and 100 more inundated. The celebration of 1,000 miles of railway in Japan a sumptuous banquet was given on the 16th ult. One hundred and eighteen students were graduated from the imperial University of Japan last month.

POSTAGE STAMPS.

The Number and Value Used Annually by the Public.

A statement prepared by the Postoffice Department shows that annually about 2,000,000,000 postage stamps are used in this country, for which the Government receives $60,000,000. These stamps cost the Government as follows: Common variety, a fraction over 0-one-thousandth of a cent, and postal cards 50 cents per thousand. At the lowest quotation one cent for $15 per thousand, the Government reaps an enormous profit, which goes toward paying the expenses of carrying the mails, etc.

The troops are returning to Cairo, and the invasion is ended.

Embezzled Over $20,000.

Harry Seybold, teller of the Bank of Wheeling, at Wheeling, W. Va., and George Henning, one of the book-keepers, have been arrested, charged with embezzling over $20,000 of the bank's funds. The embezzlements extend over a period of many months, the books having been "fixed" so as to conceal the real state of affairs. Seybold is son of the cashier of the bank and belongs to one of the best families in Wheeling. He has made a full confession, exonerating Henning, and turned over about $14,000 of the money which he had taken and placed in another bank.

—Detroit Journal: "James Halfpenny and Ad Henke, living at Four Towns, Oakland County, bought a Texas pony at Pontiac. The beast was unbroken and had to be muzzled before the boys could get the harness on them. The pony threw and dragged Henke to death near the asylum, left it where it dropped and continued home without any harness."

—An interesting case was disposed of in the United States District Court at Grand Rapids last week, which may be made supremely happy. The history of the case is brief, suggestive and unique, for it relates an instance where the arm of the law has wrought good results. We quote from the Free Press:

Some years ago Charles Bland, of Adrian, son of the well-known Dr. Bland, was charged with forgery. The young man was a fine fellow. He was accomplished and accounted by those who knew him the best of company. He was only 21 years old at the time he had then, and before this unfortunate occurrence married a young lady of prominent family of Adrian. He was taken to the House of Correction, where he remained a year, when he was pardoned out of it on his discharge on the ground that he was entitled to an indictment by a grand jury. Subsequently he was discharged by a recent ruling of the United States Supreme Court. The decision was made in the case of Ex Parte Wilson, of Washington, D. C., and Judge Brown, who held that the point was valid granted his discharge. Bland, the artist, Attorney Black thereupon represented to the court that he was discharged on a technicality, and that he was innocent of the charge. Some of the President's friends, who had known the young man in the manner in which Harrison sat down on Lockwood, thought that the opportunity was a starting up some Democrat who would be a good thing for the President, and they at once set all the wires to work. Bland was released, and the President's friends, who had known the facts, even before the pardon was granted, thought, supposed. Personally I don't believe Harrison ever knew the circumstances of the matter, making his public report, but Harrison is so fearful of being "fooled" by his friends that he would not give the matter a second thought. He was say a word about business.

Another case of interest to you may be glad to hear is that among the Republicans who galloped into the camp of the Democrats in Congress last winter was Bland, the artist. The talk here is that the President does not feel quite so kindly toward Lockwood as he will under an appointment of his nomination, and that Lockwood will be a candidate before he becomes President, and that isn't saying much.

When asked tonight about the statement made in the Detroit dispatch, ex-Chairman Huston said it was a matter of which he knew little. He said in Jackson last week, decided after considerable discussion, to put up four prizes aggregating at $1,000. The first prize is to be $500, second $250, third $150, fourth $100, to be given for a competitive drill. It is proposed to have a genuine military day, the features to include a parade and competitive drill during the day and dress parade and exhibition drill in the winning company, and sham battle by electric light.

—The following changes in the medical faculty of the University have been decided upon by the regents: The chair of histology, held by Dr. Gibbs, has been given to Dr. Howell, who was recently appointed to fill the chair of physiology. Dr. Herdser will be retained as assistant to Dr. Howell. Dr. Gibbs will retain the chair of pathology, which he has held since his connection with the medical faculty.

—Joseph Focke, a Saginaw Crispin, who left home a week ago, has gone to Springfield, "no; pikestown is the place." Focke's father, who bled him every day; open every evening. His blood is too rich; it comes through the kidneys only; let's bled him, and, if he dies, he will die a glorious martyr to the cause of temperance. Focke's mother, with the books of the State Committee under her arm, left for Springfield on the cars where every Republican is a Democrat. Focke's father, who is chairman of the committee on speakers, and a member of the committee on finance, is a statesman surrounding his personal finances with a protective tariff, and, if he can get the Democrats to pass a law giving him the right to keep silent, where testimony was wanted, he will do so.

Another phase of the story which may interest Focke's father, who is chairman of the Republican State Committee, and intimate friend of the President, and inclined to blow about it, is that the Democrats have proved of the success he had on the campaign last year, and that he has so far lost enough balance left to set the determined to have a contest before the court of the United States, and the decision of the court, if it be against the constitutionality of the Wilson tariff law, will be made the basis of a contest in Congress. Of course this statement would have to be made in the form of a petition, and it would be a very unusual proceeding, but the Democrats have the votes to do it, and Harrison knows it. Harrison knows that if he should be so unfortunate as to be unseated, he would be a laughing stock for the balance of his days. Harrison knows that if he should be so unfortunate as to be unseated, he would be a laughing stock for the balance of his days. Harrison knows that if he should be so unfortunate as to be unseated, he would be a laughing stock for the balance of his days. Harrison knows that if he should give a bond to enjoin the Democrats from taking his seat, he is starting up some Republican who would be a good thing for the President, and that MARK this prediction. The largest crowds ever seen at the state fair will be in attendance at the coming exhibition in Lansing.

The contract for the state printing for 1890-91 has been awarded to Robert Smith of the Gratiot Journal. Mr. Smith is an experienced progressive printer, has been a regular bidder for many years, and will undoubtedly give the state good service.

On our eighth page this week will be found an article from Belford's Magazine, showing the similarity of the relations of the two presidents Harrison with slavery. William Henry Harrison in 1840 believed in human slavery, Benjamin Harrison in 1889 believes in commercial slavery. The abolitionist organization of 1840 led to human freedom, and the tariff reform organization of 1888 will just as certainly lead to commercial freedom. Give the article a careful reading.

Mr. Hurt and the Salt Trust.

The democratic party can not justly be held responsible for the actions of Mr. Hurt, who has lately been endeavoring to build up a trust in salt, yet his efforts in that direction have furnished the republican papers with an excuse for cheap denunciation of those who supported Mr. B. during the late campaign. It is unwise of tenants of glass houses to throw stones, and those whose actual leader is the man who said "trusts are private affairs with which the public has no right to interfere" can not say very much upon such a subject. Besides that, Mr. Hurt's action has been criticised by the democratic press, and his position has exiled him from the party, while Blaine, after his famous defense of monopoly, has been accorded the highest party honor that can be conferred, chief consultor of the executive. The republican party is the sire, supporter and slave of trusts, and cannot blind the people by its cry of "stop thief" when some alleged democrat takes advantage of the opportunities its administration of affairs has afforded for the extension of monopoly.—Cadillac Democrat.

Fruits of Protection.

Twin children belonging to the wife of one of the locked-out miners at Spring Valley, Ill., died last week, and the physicians who attended them pronounced it a clear case of starvation. The mother had but little food in the house and was unable to provide sufficient nourishment for them.

Jealous Songsters.

A man in Owl Forge township owns two male canary birds that hate one another. Neither will sing a single note when they are in the same room, but place them in separate rooms and they will both warble for hours at a time. They are fine singers, but the moment they get sight of one another their music ceases, and they remain silent until they are separated. Once in a while the man lets them loose in a large room together just to see them fight. They pitch at one another like game cocks, but their owner separates them before either is injured.—Scranton (Pa.) Letter.

English Sarcasm.

"Do you think that American institutions are progressive?" inquired a New York gentleman of an English tourist, who is at present in this city. "Indeed I do," replied the Englishman heartily. "The classical education of even the guards on your elevated railroads makes them far superior to the guards on our English roads. I notice when your guards open the car doors, that they call out the names of the stations in an unknown tongue. I am familiar with seven distinct languages, but the guards on your elevated roads are a gulf of learning compared to our most learned scholars. I am surprised that the companies can afford to employ such men, for their salaries must be enormous, as their erudition is so vast and unfathomable.—Texas Siftings.

He Had Learned Something.

One day Patrick O'Connell, a little Irish boy, took his dinner to school, and it was eaten by cats while school was in session. The next morning he ate long after the others were through, and being asked why he was staying so long, he replied: "I have no appetite, sah. Why, the cats took my dinner yesterday, so I'm going to put it where it will be safe."—Exchange.

CATARRH.—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B. For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet containing full treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 15w19

Mr. Francis expects to contract an equal amount with other firms, to keep up the demand for the local demand. To accommodate and properly handle the work, he has added 18 feet to the length of his shop, put in another lathe, and employed Fred Watson to run one lathe. Of 50,000 corks delivered last winter, he has not heard one word of complaint or dissatisfaction. The work, perhaps, will explain Mr. Francis' call last week for so many bolts.

A Visit to Boyne City.

The editor visited Boyne City on Tuesday,—our first visit for business this year. No material changes have been made there since our visit last year. S. B. Thatcher is booming the R. S. A dispatch to the Detroit Evening News, dated at Grand Rapids, Aug. 9, says:

R. M. Cherrie, president of the Detroit, Charlevoix & Escanaba railroad, was in the city yesterday. He said that the new line was to be pushed towards completion as rapidly as money and work could do it. Most of it has been surveyed and considerable grading had been completed. The road would soon be ready for the ties and before people realized it, the line would be in operation from Mackinaw City to Charlevoix. The action of the Chicago & West Michigan road in deciding upon the completion of its branch from Baldwin to Traverse City has hastened Mr. Cherrie and the other officers towards initiating the line which they have contemplated so long. Very little work had previously been done upon it beyond the securing of a charter and the right-of-way, but when the C. & W. M. branching out it was necessary to pursue a more vigorous policy, for it was evident that the C. & W. M. had designs upon Mackinaw City itself. With the new road completed, it would give a direct line diagonally across the state from Detroit to Charlevoix.

On the same subject the Grand Rapids Democrat of the 9th says: "R. M. Cherrie, president of the Detroit, Charlevoix & Escanaba road, passed through the city yesterday. His road is not constructed, but is merely a projected line between Mackinaw City and Charlevoix, and running down through Charlevoix, Antrim, Kalkaska, Missaukee, and Clare counties to Harrison, on a spur of the F. & P. M. Most of the line has been surveyed and fair progress is being made in the work of construction, and Mr. Cherrie stated yesterday that the road bed would soon be ready for the ties. This road has been talked of for some time but very little work has hitherto been done on it save to secure a charter and right of way and a little surveying. Its present sudden start into activity again is perhaps due to the C. & W. M.'s extension from Baldwin to Traverse City. The C. & W. M. is evidently anxious to reach the straits and its present extension to Traverse is believed to be only a starter for a through line to Mackinaw via Charlevoix and Petoskey. Indeed General Manager Mulliken is authoritatively quoted as saying that after reaching Traverse City this road would be pushed through to the straits, running east of Torch Lake and with a spur into Elk Rapids. The road is to be built, it is certain, as an amalgamation or interchange of business between the C. & W. M. and the Detroit, Charlevoix & Escanaba would be highly desirable for both, and would be sufficient reason for the latter to hasten its construction between Charlevoix and Mackinaw at least. The Detroit, Charlevoix & Escanaba, if completed, would give an almost direct line diagonally across the state from Detroit to Charlevoix through a heavily wooded country and by the shores of Torch and Kalkaska, where it crosses the G. R. & I. I. has not been cut by any rail road."

The New Tax Law.

Under the new tax law, the board of review is to be elected by the township, two members to act with the supervisor, one elected each year, and to hold office two years, instead of being appointed by the town board as heretofore. At the election next spring however, there will be two members elected, one for one year, and the other for two years. The delinquent school tax heretofore carried by the county, must in the future be carried by the several school districts themselves, which will necessitate the districts spreading a larger tax the first year in order to have the usual fund to carry on the school.

The tax sales will not occur in October but in May. Deeds in regard to sales entered on all taxes delinquent and unpaid for one year from the first day of July next after their return to the auditor general as delinquent. Personal notice will be served upon all owners of property, show cause why decree should not be entered against the property in same, and stop court charges and fees will be added to the taxes. All those having delinquent taxes better look after them at once, and stop court charges and officer's expenses of serving notices.

The dedication of the first Baptist church of Charlevoix occurs next Sunday morning. Music and service appropriate to the occasion will accompany the sermon.

The Women's Missionary society have merged their regular monthly meeting with the Thursday evening prayer meeting this week. Mrs. Dr. Clough, wife of our veteran missionary to the Telegus, and herself many years a missionary in Burmah, has consented to address the meeting. An interesting program will be offered. All come.

The McGibney Family will give its another one of their unrivaled musical entertainments on Tuesday evening, Aug. 20th. It is worth a long journey to see those little folks in their exercises. Their music is of a high order, their movements perfect. Tickets 50 and 35 cents; children 25 cents.

Excursions will be run from East Jordan and Boyne City to the McGibney Family Concert, at Lewis grand opera house, Charlevoix, Tuesday evening, Aug. 20. Fare for round trip, and reserved seat at concert 75 cents. Tickets on sale at principal stores in East Jordan and Boyne City.

During the past week there has been apparently a great interest in the Indian camp-meeting two miles northeast of town, and every available vehicle was pressed into the carrying service between the village and the camp ground. On Sunday, not only every available horse was on duty, but the boat livories and the steamer Nellie were in active service all day.

Detroit Free Press: "Hettie Bernard Chase is new to Detroit, but her work as the heroine "Coquette" last night created a most favorable impression. She entered into the comic spirit of the part with a buoyancy and relish that the audience did not fail to appreciate, while in the most serious scenes she manifested a power that few soubrette artists possess. In fact her whole work stamped her as a thorough artist and one whose Detroit audiences will always be glad to welcome." Lewis grand opera house, Saturday, August 17.

The Cadillac Democrat of Aug. 7 has the following: "The marriage of Rev. R. F. Aldrich, brother of Judge Aldrich, and Miss Bertha Yerkes will be celebrated at the home of the bride's parents in Hersey, to-morrow. Both of the contracting parties are well known and highly esteemed in Cadillac, where they have taught school, and several of their intimate friends from here will attend the wedding. Mr. Aldrich was ordained pastor of the Congregational church at Ironton, Mich., last week."

W. H. Francis has just closed a contract with a New York firm for 100,000 cedar fish corks, delivery to be made this fall and early next winter. Mr. Francis expects to contract an equal amount with other firms, to keep up the demand for the local demand. To accommodate and properly handle the work, he has added 18 feet to the length of his shop, put in another lathe, and employed Fred Watson to run one lathe. Of 50,000 corks delivered last winter, he has not heard one word of complaint or dissatisfaction. The work, perhaps, will explain Mr. Francis' call last week for so many bolts.

A Visit to Boyne City.

The editor visited Boyne City on Tuesday,—our first visit for business this year. No material changes have been made there since our visit last year. S. B. Thatcher is booming the R. S. Hotel and holding up the postoffice, his daughter Miss Maud acting as assistant. D. M. Scomboon "Sam" manages to be on hand when there is any business to be done. W. J. Lewis has built a fine residence at the Commercial, and seems to be holding a good trade. A good solid citizen and business man feel grateful to his host, and that was pretty much our situation Tuesday week.

Register Blair and Treasurer Ward were there at that time. Jim Blair lay happened to be out of town.—A E. Martin has bought Shaw's entire stock recently owned by Mohlo et East Jordan, moved it to Boyne, and proposes to run a second hand business. The state teachers intstitute was in session with about thirty teachers in attendance. The rain had much to do with the light attendance.

The steamer Nellie makes two trips a day, leaving Charlevoix at 7.00 a. m. and 1.00 p. m. She is a staunch, clean, lively boat, and Capt. Bradley is as accommodating a master as runs on the lake.

The annual autumn excursion from Detroit and southern Michigan over the D., L. & N. and G. R. & I. railroads to Petoskey and northern Michigan, occurs on Tuesday Sept. 3. LATEST RAILROAD NEWS

THE GRADING COMMENCED.

Contractor Rock and a Large Force of Men and Teams Now at Work.

Contractor Rock arrived on the City of Charlevoix yesterday afternoon, and this morning he collected a large force of men and teams, and is now at work on the grade of the D. C. & E. Railroad, commencing on the beach of Pine Lake, in front of the property of John S. Dixon.

He announces his intention of having at least three hundred men at work by next Tuesday morning, the tools and part of the men to arrive on the next boat from Chicago.

A large number of our citizens were on hand to see the first work done, and the inevitable Dan Way was there with his photo outfit to make a record of the proceedings.

Let the good work go on!

VALUABLE INDIAN RELICS.

A Rare Collection of Curiosities on Exhibition in Charlevoix.

A. T. Washburne & Co. have on exhibition at their store a lot of very interesting and valuable Indian relics. They were originally the property of Chief Sitting Bull, who was captured some years ago by Capt. Walter Clifford, then with Gen. Custer. Mrs. Clifford was at the garrison when Sitting Bull was brought in, and secured these relics and brought them home to Charlevoix. Afterward Mr. Washburn purchased them, and they have for some time been a great attraction at the store. They would make a valuable addition to any museum, or public fair or exposition, if Mr. Washburne could be persuaded to part with them. In the collection are the following articles worthy of mention:

One full-length buckskin beaded suit, the skin for which was tanned an almost perfect white. The beads are put on with sinews, and all the work of decoration is perfect and permanent. It was evidently very choice, and worn only on state occasions.

With the suit is a complete feather head-dress, the feathers being mostly gray eagle, in natural colors.

There is a buckskin overshirt, with bull's head worked in colored beads on the front.

One peace pipe of hard red stone, with long flat wooden stem.

One knife war club, with three large butcher knives riveted into a heavy wooden handle three feet long.

One stone war club, with heavy sharp-pointed stone fastened to a raw-hide handle, six feet long.

Six beaded leather pouches; one beaded tobacco pouch, with extra pouch for flints; one tobacco pouch made of the skin of a small animal, adorned with the hair on.

One beaded talisman (in the form of a turtle).

Two beaded scourges.

One buffalo drinking horn.

One pair beaded moccasins.

One beaded pappoose pouch, for wrapping up and carrying pappooses.

One heavy buckskin sable-bag.

One knife-sheath, well worn and hard with age (and use).

On all these articles, the beads are attached with sinews, and are therefore as permanent as the leather to which they are attached. The

LIBERTY'S MARTYRS.

BY EVA KATHARINE CLAPP.

Bursed by the rays of the great electric light
Upon the shadow of Liberty's lofty height,
And, hundreds of sad heads sightly shaded, they Stood in the sunshine of a long, long day.
Many pass indeed, and are found dead at the feet of the Goddess when morning dawns.—
Newspaper paragraph.

Alone, on the desolate shore she stands,
Barren, as the years drift by,
Widow drawn,
As by dawn,
Her unfurled hands
Her wild, winged worshippers fly.

The forms born to horror, or climb, or creep,
Are safe on the earth, where they cling.
But there she stands
Are of space and air,
And stay on a lonely year and sing.

They are thrilled and filled with a fervor caught
From the infinite wisdom! Hark! Hark!
In their steadfast flight,
Which shows a lonely
And their solemn song is death and pain.

Oh! wings, wings, wings,
Flutter through dark and rain,
Merely to drop in death at her feet.
Has your struggle been all in vain?

Day, cold days and wasted, thus vision bright,
That inspired each they breast
With such keen delight
Through that weary flight
Toward the flaring star of rest.

No fate so taught doth Wisdom teach
Upon New Liberty's throne,
By symbol or speech,
But has to each that reach
Toward light, through each bitter age.

And true as the course of the rolling year
Is the song that you sweet stars sing.
That light growth anew
Over the black shade. Wrong.
As summer overtops the spring.

Then heat, heat, heat, brave hearts, through Oppression's night
Liberty stands by the black sea sands,
Upholding her beacon light.

FEMININE STRATEGY.

CHAPTER I.

He had been telling her all he had to tell, and now she stood there quite still, neither by word nor glance vouchsafing the answer he which he pleaded.

"I must know the best or the worst, Christine," he whispered. "Speak to me darling."

Her cheeks violently, and a vivid color rushed to her cheeks. Her head gardenia had had that, she could not shake off, silly which died away in a low, sad sob.

"Speak to me, Christine," he also said, softly, as she still stood, "speak to me, sweet! in a murmur, 'but I can not be your wife.'"

"I understand," with a short, hard laugh; "you will not. Pray be frank."

At this she silently removed her glove and held out her hand. A soft, white hand it was, and one little finger was encircled by a heavy band of gold.

"Married?"

"Yes, sir." And Miss Illerton's voice grew firmer now. "I am engaged to Arthur Gower."

Her companion was a tall, dark man, with a sunburnt face and a heavy mustache and broad brown eyes, evidently not the man to be easily overcome by any passing emotion, yet now he fairly staggered beneath the blow her words had dealt; so when he spoke again it was with a calm deprecation.

"Forgive me," said he; "I have had so many hopes that—"

"Why did you write to me?" she interrupted, turning upon him sharply.

"Because I thought—" I was a fool, that is all.

"Let us have done with folly," commanded Christine, almost wearily. "Come with a sudden, passionate outburst—'Ah! why need you have come? Could you not see? could you not understand?'

Now he caught her outstretched hands, and, holding her in his arms, presented her close upon his breast. For one little moment the poor lips quivered beneath a rain of kisses, for one little moment only; then, sadly truly freeing herself, she said but this:

"Go now, Ralph."

"Shall I write?"

"Do, if you respond; 'it is too late; understand me—too late! I shall marry Arthur Gower and I shall not do dishonor now, even if I could."

And so, quitting the deep shadow of the willows, never looking back, Miss Illerton walked down the garden-path, her dainty white gown fluttering in the morning breeze, her whiter face hard and fixed and strangely stern.

Some one met her as she crossed the hall.

"Where is Mr. Gresham, Christine?"

"Gone."

"Are you ill, dear?"

"No; I will be down presently, Clara," passing on quickly.

This abruptness would have offended almost any other woman, but Clara Volney being unlike almost any other woman, simply turned away a velvet pettiness easily read in the troubled glance of her blue eyes.

She stood leaning against the doorway, just inside the hall, a color in her cheeks, and slender little fingers mechanically threading an unruly yellow curl, when Miss Illerton sharply called to her from the gallery above.

"Clara!"

"Yes, dear."

"I want you."

Obedient Clara was presently in her cousin's chamber, listening to a half contrition form of self-rebuke and a wild yearning for some word of tender consolation.

"We have no secrets from each other, have we, Clara?" commenced Miss Illerton.

"No, none."

"From the time—so long ago!—when we first met, we have—from the moment when we pledged our hand, and hade so much each other, not as cousins only but as sisters dear, have I ever, by word or deed, put that last counsel to shame, Clara?

"Never, Christine."

"Think again."

"Never," reiterated the girl.

"It is false!" cried Miss Illerton, her cheeks ablaze now; "I have wronged you by a foolish silence; I have insulted the dead by wilfully disobeying her last wishes! I acted like a coward, Clara; I have been cruel to my cousin and false to my friend; I was the token of love; I am happy, share my cousin." That word of sister would have done—what I should have done; is it true?"

"Arthur Gower?"

"The frank and quite faded from Clara's cheeks, but her eyes were bright with some keen emotion of surprise or joy or doubt again.

"Yes," went on Christine, never heeding Clara, "and just now, in the garden, she almost cross my laugh Gresham, and she loves me, Clara."

"Well?"

"But it is too late," said Miss Illerton, sadness in inflection.

"What did you tell him?" asked her cousin, eagerly.

"What I have told you—that it was too late, and that I would not, even if I could." She spoke very slowly, marking each word with a lingering emphasis; then, as the last fell from her lips she started up with a sharp laugh. "Just think of it, Clara—Arthur Gower! Did I tell you what he said? Forgive. It was the double shock. He took my hand, and he confessed that ring upon my finger! how long that must have rankled in his mind! Very still, 'Christine,' said he, 'it is our purest wish, you remember, that you should be my wife—will you consent?' And I consented, of course, he, then, now, that troublesome affair is arranged, and I am to marry him, and—. For heaven's sake, Clara, open that window! one stifling day!"

She came and stood by her cousin, and for a moment both looked out upon the stretch of lawn and the shadowy willows, and then her cousin put her low, fancies, and then between sobs the dark ball of woods, now soft and shadowed by the purple haze of the last falling night.

Presently, turning to Miss Illerton, Clara asked in a half-whisper:

"Are you happy, Christine?"

"Why? I? What a drolly question! Why, I am now the happiest woman in the world."

The next gray daybreak stole in, through that same window upon a woman who had passed the livelong night crouched in that great chair, her head resting upon the broad sill.

A pale-faced creature, who looked up listlessly when the swallows commenced twittering in the far-reaching eaves, and then with a sigh and a shudder turned from this over-new glory of the coming day.

"O, Lord!" she cried, and said no more.

"Why, what is the matter, Miss Illerton?" cried Clara, startled by her pale face and excessive pallor, when she the happiest woman in the world.

CHAPTER II.

A summer's day slowly dying—a tender gloom stealing down the long aisles of forest trees and the low murmur of softly pleading ripples; a mass of jagged black rocks, with the last rays of sunlight glitter upon their bald tops, and gnarled branches overreaching low, dark-tufted boughs, to dip in the ripples below.

"Magnificent! Do you know the picture is a true picture at 'The Crag.' Then imagine a time, prettily painted canoe, with a young woman at either end, and a gentleman fairly divining his attention between his companions and the skilful management of the slender oars.

Now you have Miss Illerton, her cousin and Arthur Gower.

They had been floating lazily on, with hands a word now and then to break a stillness almost painful, until they neared the dangerous Black Rock, upon the point where it became entangled in the treacherous lily-pads, which always enough to fling one of the women backward, and dangerous enough to startle Arthur into a singularly awkward betrayal of emotion.

The little form had barely swayed when the gentleman, with a hoarse cry, sprang forward.

"Clara! My God, Clara!"

That was all he said, yet, when he remembered himself, he was holding Clara Volney in his arms.

"Is she hurt?"

"Not at all, Miss Illerton's, and now the clever remembrance, too, that the woman whom he should marry was beside him.

"Are you hurt, Christine?" he asked, leaning hotly as his arms fell from Clara.

"Not at all, thank you."

"Why, what is the matter?" her cousin, laughing nervously. "Only frightened. It was so sudden, you see."

"Yes, it was sudden, certainly," acquiesced the lady, with a very cold glance.

This extraordinary assertion received no contradiction, for the boat was being made fast to the low, quaintly contrived landing of roughly hewn logs; then, as Miss Illerton stepped upon this rustic platform, Arthur Gower touched her hand, saying, slightly.

"What is the matter, Christine?" to vexing.

"Why, what should be the matter?" And again, affecting to notice for the first time his anxiety hesitation, she continued, laughing: "My dear boy, not just that one is proper place, will you, then follow? Thank you, Gresham, I can quite well walk alone. The people will be there."

"These people" were city friends who enjoyed semi-annually frequent visits to The Crag, and to welcome them now hastened the hospitable mistress of the old manor house, leaving Mr. Gower in a most painful state of anxious doubt and self-convicted treachery.

Christine Illerton was not a woman of half measures. That night she entered her cousin's chamber, and without ado put the question to her point-blank:

"How long can this been going on?"

"Why, what—"

"Fie, fie, I wish the truth; I wish you to be frank.

"Why, what do you mean?" asked Clara, yet never looking up.

"Why, you understand me. How long has this been going on between you and—and—the man whom I intend to marry?"

At this Clara lifted her head and looked at her cousin in with innocent, fearless eyes.

"You do not mean to accuse us of anything like a flirtation, I hope," she said, proudly.

"Indeed," was Miss Illerton's cool response. "I accuse you of nothing. There has been no flirtation, but there has been a great deal of intimacy, and a strong, lasting. Your knowledge was forced upon me this afternoon, remember.

"Ah, Christine!"

"Let me finish this young woman displayed woeful ignorance of the first principles of feminine strategy; for, instead of alarming me, or, indeed, of startling me, you, by pointing out the false position from the unfortunate circumstance of that keen-eyed sharpshooter, Miss Christine Illerton, the silly creature only hid her face in her hands, and, very, very piteous sobbing, proclaimed her ignominious overthrow.

"Ah, reassured—Ah, Christine!

"Instead of calling my name in that utterly incomprehensible manner, you would do better to answer my question," suggested Miss Illerton. "How long has Arthur Gower loved you?"

"I never knew that he loved me," protested the other.

"Do he told it very plainly this afternoon, and I was present, if you recollect."

"Christine, dear Christine! Clara was trembling now, not weeping, but speaking with low, impressive eagerness. "As I live, never before; has he said as much as that never before has he uttered one word that you might not have heard—never, Christine, cousin?"

"Do you tell me this upon your honor?"

"Upon my honor!"

"Then I believe him, of course. There, you look as if you would. Keep your secret, child. Only remember this, that you are wilfully walking to a moral destruction, for I shall certainly marry the man you love. Good-night, Clara."

* * *

"What does it matter to me? Why should I care if she breaks her heart (or him) for love? Love? Love? I protested Miss Illerton, as she sauntered slowly to her own room. An hour later, after an awkward interview with Mr. Gower, "They make their own misery. That which we do, we do for ourselves. Love? Love? Why, I am a fool, I am not to be a victim. Love—after all, I save her from a wretched fate.

CHAPTER III.

"Life, like nature, has its unnatural calms—breathless calms preceding ruthless devastation—or else there come those scanns and dead silences, when both life and nature seem to have passed, half-affrighted at the wreck and ruin cumbering their path.

Such a time had come to Christine Illerton. Throughout that livelong night had she been with her past, and that grim spectre had told her many bitter truth in had shown her the graves deep beneath which lay her dead hopes, and, by dint of the dead there rying, and of them, she there was—

"Not dead, not dead, or, how real—

"Not dead! Dead? Ay, in very truth to be dead to me! For when I killed his trust I killed his love, and so—ah, good God, be merciful!

The old cry, you see. Truly, her need was sore.

There was no one in the breakfast-room when Christine entered but Raynor, the housekeeper.

A cheery little octagon was that breakfast-room, especially on a bright, soft air gently lifted the light curtains, and the many flowers on the sideboard and light shimmered among the silver and glass. Christine sighed as she seated herself before the orderly table.

"Where is Miss Volney?"

"She is not very well, Miss Christine," was Raynor's answer—"not very well, and she won't be down. I have seen her, and it's more a bad headache; so there's no need to worry, dear.

Miss Illerton did not worry. She sat her cup and saucer, and, when she finished, she prepared a tempting little meal, saying, the housekeeper, "Let some be taken to my cousin, please."

"Yes, dear, she will not touch it to-day. Poor little creature! I really so sad," objected Raynor.

"Take it, please, and tell her this I'm her to eat, said Miss Illerton.

Presently she was in Clara's chamber. That young person was pretty well, and seemed wearing. Indeed, judging from her appearance the whole night long she spent in that pleasant diversion. Still, she contrived in some awkward manner to screen her eyes, but her voice betrayed her; that trembled treacherously.

To neither of these tokens did Miss Illerton vouchsafe any notice. In the most matter-of-fact manner possible she busied herself about her cousin's room, suggested the offices.

"Are you better, Clara?"

"Sure better, thank you, Christine."

"Very well. Now listen to me. Why did you not take the breakfast I sent you?"

"I couldn't."

"I understand, yes. Clara, you must obey me. Here are my instructions—commands, if you will. You are to remain quite still and try to sleep. Don't attempt to come down to luncheon. Your meal will be brought to you."

"Wish you would not, Christine. Dear, I—"

"Nonsense! sharply retorted her cousin. "Do you intend to start? None but heroines or high, I apply do such things, and I know you always announce their suicidal intentions in doubtful blank verse. You have not done this yet. Will you begin?

"I am so wretched!" moaned the girl—"so utterly and unspeakably wretched.

"Very good," continued the other, with stoical indifference "but you are not to begin here until I send for you. Then, if you is so very wretched, you will, of course, do so in the morning, and not spare a moment. Don't be silly, Clara; don't blind your eyes and block your way with tears. There, you are crying again. Good heavens, woman! what if a great and terrible misery in life? Need you nurse it offer such a fashion?

But the startling vehemence of this appeal produced an effect contrary to that of the one to intended. Clara only gave way to a perfect passion of sobs, whereupon Miss Illerton impatiently changed her tactics, and, drew and without another word walked from the room.

CHAPTER IV.

"You did me a great injustice," said she, wearily. "Too hastily you jumped to conclusions upon hearsay. Had you done so—

"Why?" came the question.

Miss Illerton finished her sentence with a cold reproach.

"Had you done so you would have spared me much unnecessary trial as well.

"Does Clara know that? commenced Mr. Gower, with a sudden flush.

"Do you and I comprehend each other yesterday? No, she does not.

"Then I understand you, Christine, in some degree.

"Not at most not despise me, now, Christine.

"I did—yes, I despised what appeared to me an manly weakness and pitiful falsehood. I did not consider the mistaken sense of honor which caused you to hesitate between Clara and myself.

"If you had ever loved me," she interrupted, with great earnestness, "this marriage was arranged between our parents. We were thrown together, and, forgetting the others; therein lay our fault. Why, we have been miracles of obedience supplying "Christine, suppose that all had been different, supposed.

"That you had loved me. Is that what you wish to say?

"Well, yes, that I had not loved Clara, would you then have sacrificed herself?

"Miss Illerton did not answer immediately, but, as for a moment, quite still, her head resting upon her hand.

"I can not tell," she said at last, half dreamily, "Heaven help me. I can not tell! I believed that I was right. Then, I, with sudden energy, "Never mind what might have been. I think only of the real. Wait here, I will be back presently." And she was back presently.

"Mr. Gower, I have spoken to Clara Volney. The young lady was very pale, but showed a remarkable composure. Miss Illerton's keen eyes, however, detected the sudden flush and the fear, the tremor of the little hand their clasped.

"Her mind is made up, and I can repate so much as one poor word on all this angrily. Leading her compass on forward she passed before her visitor; then she spoke:

"Mr. Arthur Gower, I give you my cousin as a wife.

"Christine—

"I do not interrupt me, Mr. Gower has been making a mistake, and it is time it was understand each other now. You mus—

"I was Mr. Gower who interrupted her now. He took this hand and kissed it reverently.

"Hush—as I say, Christine!

"My dear boy, say nothing—do not. There is Clara, and—

"Clara stood away laughingly, as the door she stopped suddenly, this retreated her steps.

"Do, do, see nothing!" she asked. "Do without you mean to marry me?

"I do," cried Clara. "Where is it?"

"Ah, reassured—Ah, Christine!

"Ah, yes, I am sure! Oh, Arthur, where is it?

But Arthur said never a word, only stood smiling gravely at his fiancée.

"He does not know," reversed the latter, with mock severity. "Well I will tell you. I threw it in the river this morning when I was—

Miss Illerton put her hand to her left, and the ring, the token of betrothal, was no longer there.

"Thus had she decided the matter of her marriage with Arthur Gower.

There had been a busy time at The Crag, such a busy time as inevitably precedes a marriage, and now on the morrow very ancient, that every tee, years the eagle sears into a fresh vigor, and, flying thence into the sea, where, melting its feathers, it acquires new life.

The eagle is the only emblem of the lectern in churches, because that bird is the natural enemy of the serpent, and it is also emblematic of St. John the Evangelist, because, like the eagle, he looked on "the sun of glory."

The idea has always been held that the eagle alone of the animal world has eyes which can withstand the full blaze of the sun at middle. The terms golden eagle and spread eagle are commemorative of the crusades; they were the ensigns of the armies of the East. In the mythology of Scandinavia there is a fable of a wonderful ash tree which drops honey. Jay Cooke Rich Again.

Among the pushing throng of Broadway was one an old gentleman clad more in the garb of a countryman than that of a great financier. Long clothes were plain, and his white slouch hat, with its broad brim, gave him the appearance of a well-to-do farmer. The hair and beard of Jay Cooke are now white as snow, and he looks as different from the famous banker—the man who has handled more millions than any other private individual in America, failed for more money than any other, and finally has grown rich again after he had grown old. While he is by no means as familiar a figure on the Street as he was, and does not get in the uncertainty of "the street," as of yore, he is more frequently seen among the bustle of business men than almost any man in Philadelphia.

Jay Cooke has had a singular career. When the war broke out he was located along Lake Erie, at Sandusky, and Salmon P. Chase, while Secretary of the Treasury, made quite him a big start in life, which he followed to disaster, and then built anew from the ashes. Mr. Cooke never forgot or neglected his home in Ohio, and one of his chief delights is spending days on an island in Lake Erie, a few miles from Sandusky, that he bought and named "Gibraltar." He had it laid out in wild romantic walks, and built a commodious summer cottage upon it. He provided the house with every imaginable comfort, and put into it a competent housekeeper. To this retreat he would invite each summer ministers of the gospel of different denominations, who could ill afford to take a summer vacation.

Mr. Cooke lives with his son-in-law now, Mr. Barney, who does business near the famous old banking-house on Third street, in Philadelphia, over which Mr. Cooke once presided, and where the Northern Pacific Railroad was projected. In many respects Jay Cooke will go down to history as one of the remarkable men of our time. In Ohio church out at Frankford, near Philadelphia, he has a sen preaching to a congregation who can hardly afford the sum salary enough to liquidate his horse hire. So the curious turns of fate. The brilliant twinkle in Jay Cooke's career and in that of the family he has raised.

Too Slow.

The first electric telegraph was put in operation between Baltimore and Washington, in 1845, Congress having appropriated $30,000 to enable them to keep it running for one year, as an experiment. Some of the prominent incidents of those early days, and of the best is the following, which used to be told by the late Professor Henry:

A pretty little girl visited the office in Baltimore, and, after a great deal of hesitation and coloring, asked how long it would take to send to Baltimore.

Mr. Morse looked at the pretty queen timer with much interest as he answered:

"Two second."

"Oh, how delightful!" exclaimed the girl, her eyes glistening with rapture, "as quick as that! Why, I can send even quicker if you can?" and Mr. Morse found in a little while a neatly folded, gilt-edged note, the very perfume and shape of which told a volume of tale.

"I cannot send this note," said Mr. Morse, "it is too long."

"Oh, do, do!" implored the distracted girl, "I have had a quarrel with William, and I shall die if he receives it in a second that I forgive him—I shall die!"

As Mr. Morse still objected to sending the note, the girl asked:

"Will you send me on?"

"Perhaps it would take your breath away to hear the response," said the clerk, trying not to smile.

"Oh, no, do tell me, can it work, if it carries me to William?"

"You could go by train to-morrow."

"Oh, I can't wait so long."

Mr. Morse now comprehended the girl's mistake, and proceeded to explain the process of carrying words along the wires.

The girl seemed for a few moments then rolled her burning note into a ball threw it into her pocket.

"It's too slow, too slow, and my heart will be broken before William knows I forgive him; and you are a cruel man, Mr. Morse, that you won't let me travel by telegraph to William."

"I am very sorry."

The girl left the office in tears.

Helen Densmore.

New York has some interesting women, and not the least among them is Dr. Helen Densmore. Helen Densmore is related to Ben Barnard, and under that name there are many newspaper stories about her, and her handsome woman, with a shapely head and a profusion of yellow hair, who not long ago was the only woman in the reporters gallery of the House of Representatives, and who, by her writing letters as if a man—and a clever man—were knocking off the sentences. Helen Barnard was a figure in the political and journalistic circles of Washington. Lamar, Garfield, Butler and Jere Black held weekly an informal discussion with her. When a mission was organized to look into the treatment of emigrants in the steerage crossing the Atlantic Ocean went to President Grant and had Mrs. Barnard appointed on it at the same salary received by the men. The gentlemen on that commission had a fine time at the Vienna Exposition, but saw few emigrants. Helen Barnard had to go in old dress and sailed from Liverpool to New York in the steerage of the Inman Line. Unless she knew the privations and abuse of that passage considerably less than I did when I investigated the charges made by Cooke's career and in that of the family he has raised.

Too Hospitable.

"Your friend, Mrs. Ames, is charming, isn't she?" said one lady to another.

"Charming, indeed!" was the cordial reply. "She is so hospitable."

"And yet you never stay after house, when you accost me, she is so anxious about it the other day, and seemed quite hurt."

"Well, to tell the truth, I haven't time to go to Mrs. Ames' when I come to town on a shopping day," was the reply. "You know she has a way of arranging your shopping for you, and, in such a way, that she does it from the best of motives, I find it very distracting."

The accusation was literally true. If one presumed to buy a dress, she knew a skin which is much heavier than that of other people, and, if one said it is a piece of well-tanned skin from the calf of a man's leg." And the doctor disposed of the dress as being strong and thick.

In a museum in Belgium are the bodies of six members of one family. They were all buried in a tan yard, and, when they had decomposed twenty years afterward, the skin, flesh, and even the hair was found well preserved, the thoroughly tanned were all the parts. These specimens are in a building called the Museum, near the Egyptian mummies.

Four years ago the tanning of human skin in Massachusetts was effected that the Mormon Tabernacle time the business has ceased. The few samples of tanned human skin now obtainable are made by scientists as an experiment.

School Teacher's Experiences.

School teachers have many funny experiences in the rural districts of Tennessee and Kentucky. One teacher relates that one of her pupils was taken out of school because he endeavored to persuade him that the earth was round. His father would not have him taught such nonsense, and he stated to the teacher the earth was flat that he challenged the teacher to prove the contrary. The teacher proved honest, and the jury disagreed. The man admitted that there were too many hills and mountains for the earth to be exactly flat, and finally went so far as to say that the earth "might be round this 'ere way" east and west) "cause the people might fall off; but it is not round this way (north and south). What confusing reasoning he used in his behalf the teacher could not divine, but it convinced at least half the audience.

It is remarkable how moral courage will almost always overcome brute force. When Gen. Clarke was subpoenaed to testify against Aaron Burr in order to paint a picture for a Brazilian grandee, and went down to that country to do the work, the Brazilian took a fancy to the poor portrait painter, and not only paid him a good price for the picture but let him in on some money-making scheme out of which Clarke realized quite a sum. He returned to Philadelphia and went into the mercantile business, and, as his full investments he amassed a big fortune, and his three boys—Francis, Anthony and Joseph—increased it. When the old man died he was worth about $1,000,000. Francis, the oldest boy died, he left $25,000,000. Joseph left about $6,000,000, being less of a money-maker than the others, and Anthony, the only one left, is estimated to be worth anywhere from $20,000,000 to $50,000,000. Nobody really knows how much he is worth, but the house can raise $50,000,000 or more in twenty-four hours, if necessary, which is something no other institution in the country, outside of the United States Treasury, can do. When Frank died he left three daughters. All are under twenty-five, one only is married, and they have each an income of about $1,000 a day. The fellow who married one of them was a young lawyer without a dollar.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

MOTOR OF THE DOCTOR

Mrs. A.—Doctor, what is the amount of your bill?

"Yes, sir, you see, you make another miscalculation while I'm talking to you."

Gloves of Human Skin.

"Gloves which are sold as kid are often made of human skin," said a Philadelphia physician recently. "The skin on the breast is soft and pliable, and may be used in the making of gloves. When people buy gloves they never stop to question about the material of which they are made. The shop-keeper himself may be in ignorance, and the merchant who imports and advertising the material is amassed a big fortune, and his three boys—Francis, Anthony and Joseph—increased it. Marks of Gentility.

There are many curious personal habits and usages that originally were marks of gentility, if not aristocracy. The practice observed among Spanish ladies of allowing the finger-nails to grow into claw-like forms was to show that the wearer did not do any work. The same thing is done by the Chinese for the same purpose.

Among the ancient Romans the wearing of long sleeves, which came down to the wrists, was a mark of the upper circles. This advertised to the world that the person was not employed in any labor, and freedom from employment was, according to the ancient idea, the mark of the condition of respectability.

The height of absurdity is reached in the fancy of the Chinese leaders of fashion for the use of the small deformed feet. The next morning when she left her brother put on his clothes, greatly to his annoyance his cuff buttons were gone again. His younger brother ran to the window sill, and he would show him where his buttons were. Her friend laughed together, and the younger brother scratched down in the ground near the wall and dug up sets of the buttons, greatly to the surprise of the older brother, and it was evident that he was not at first made to believe that he in his sleep walking had taken the buttons, and in plagues him no little to refer to the matter in his hearing.

Story of a Somnambulist.

Not long since saw an amusing incident occurred in Texas. A young gentleman one of the best families discovered when he put on his top shirt in the morning that some one had stolen his cuff buttons, and cuff buttons from him during the night. He tried to discover the thief, but found no trace of him. He bought another pair of buttons, and it was but a few days until he was called on to like manner as before, the buttons having been stolen from him in the night. The young man was perplexed to little, not being able to account for the loss, and again bought buttons, and a few nights afterward his younger brother, who was asleep, was observed to get up, walked during the night and found him the place where the buttons were, and his clothes on, and saw him carefully remove the buttons from the shirt cuffs and leisurely walk over the room round the house and dig a hole in the ground near the wall and bury them, and carefully cover them up, and return to his room and retire.

It just then dawned upon the younger brother that the elder brother was a somnambulist, and he without delay developments. So the next morning when the elder brother put on his clothes, greatly to his annoyance his cuff buttons were gone again. His younger brother ran to the window sill, and he would show him where his buttons were. Her friend laughed together, and the younger brother scratched down in the ground near the wall and dug up sets of the buttons, greatly to the surprise of the older brother, and it was evident that he was not at first made to believe that he in his sleep walking had taken the buttons, and in plagues him no little to refer to the matter in his hearing.

Water Cresses in New Jersey.

"I have lived here for nearly forty years," said an old resident of Bellville, "N. J., and never in all that time have I eaten anything for my breakfast during the spring, summer, and autumn season except bread and butter and water cresses."

The old gentleman's practice is not exclusively his own. There are still persons who eat water cresses, and call them the healthiest herbs that grow. The streams that flow into the Passaic river, in the vicinity of Bellville, are just now literally choked with water cresses, and although baskets are filled with them every morning, they seem rather to increase than to diminish in numbers. Scores of persons, young and old, find a health, if recreation in picking them when the early dew is on the grass, and are willing to submit to the inevitable penalty of wet feet for the pleasure of the occupation and the flavor of the cress. Country maidens who are by no means partial to early rising as a prelude to lighting the fire or milking the cow, are up with the lark when it becomes a question of wading in the cool streams and gathering water cresses.

The water cress is a weed, pure and simple. It can never be anything else. Efforts to cultivate it and produce a better and more delicate species have been made, and signally failed. Under favorable circumstances it takes fainty, pungent, mustard flavor that is its especial charm, and assumes much of the hot, pungent taste of the horse radish. It flourishes for nearly nine months in the year, and, as it is constantly renewing itself, the large, coarse leaves of the old plants may be left to wither, and only the young, delicate stems picked. It will bear cooking of any kind, but eaten raw with a little salt, and fresh bread and butter, it is—well, try it.—New York Sun.

HAVE WE ABOLISHED SLAVERY?

An Interesting Comparison of the Two Presidents Harrison.

J. F. Hume in Belford's Magazine for August.

"No—no—no free trade!"

So, was the cry that swelled from many throats. It was the sentiment to which a great procession was marching. The place was Broadway, New York; the time, October, 1888; the occasion, a presidential campaign; and the motive that inspired the expression above quoted, the advancement of the cause of Benjamin Harrison, the national republican candidate. The writer stood on the sidewalk as the column filed by. It was a remarkable body of men, amazons and pre-eminently respectable. In the ranks were merchants and bankers, real estate operators and capitalists; and here and there a nil admirare trudged along like any common mortal. Not that all were of the same social grade. Men who worked with their hands; factory operatives, mechanics, and even day laborers, were in line; but I noticed that the employer and his workmen did not walk together. There was a separation of the sheep from the goats. The wage-earners were formed into sections by themselves; and I also noticed that they were less demonstrative than their more professional fellow-trampers. My fancy suggested that a good many of them were earning their regular pay by temporarily serving their masters in a new capacity. But be that as it might, the demonstration, with its banners and mottoes, its many bands of music and uniformed companies,—for this expense has been spared to make it impressive,—was brilliant and spirited. Cheers for the popular candidate and other declarations of opinion from time to time arose; but every expression ended with the refrain, that rolled up and down the line, "No—no—no free trade!"

As ours, in theory at least, is preeminently a free country, a declaration from such a quarter against what would seem to be one of our most valuable liberties, was certainly somewhat startling; and, in seeking its explanation, the writer's recollection, as he stood gazing upon the novel spectacle, was irresistibly carried back to its utmost limit in public matters, which happened to be a remarkable one, with strikingly similar features, in our national history. The presidential campaign of 1840—the time referred to—forty-eight years before, was memorable in several material respects. It was a period of much political excitement, and popularized, if it did not inaugurate, the system now so general in electioneering, of party rallies with processions and other theatrical displays. The successful candidate then was Harrison—the grandfather, by the way, of the present President. But what made the campaign of 1840 especially notable was the fact that it saw the first organized political movement in favor of universal civil liberty in America. The "liberty" or abolitionist party—forerunner of the latter day republican organization—then for the first time entered the field. It controlled but a little over 7,000 votes, but it made a beginning. Its candidate was not a Harrison. On the contrary, the Harrison of 1840 was the one uncompromising pro-slavery candidate before the public. His principal opponent, Martin Van Buren, was suspected of unsoundness on the question—an impression which was published by his defeat four years later for the nomination of his party, on account of his opposition to the leading pro-slavery measure of Texas annexation, and its subsequent adoption with the leadership of the Free Soil column. But no one questioned Gen. Harrison's loyalty to pro-slavery interests. As one of the territorial governors of the northwest, he had sided with the element that tried to break down the freedom clause in the celebrated Jeffersonian ordinance of 1787. He had that attempt succeeded,—and it came dangerously near to it—it was probability that our country, instead of being all free, would now be all slaveholding. Harrison's subsequent career corresponded with that position; and yet it had a good deal to do with the anti-slavery movement referred to. In the same community with him—Cincinnati, Ohio—had lived a man of the name of James G. Birney. He was something of a literary character, and established a newspaper called The Philanthropist. In his journal he advocated, in what now looks like a very timorous way, the manumission of the slave. He evidently thought he had a right to so, but many of his neighbors were of a different opinion. They accordingly entered his establishment, and, setting upon its contents, marched with them to the Ohio river, and unceremoniously consigned them to the fishes. This act was openly commended by the leading citizens of the place, and among those accused of offensively approving the deed were General Harrison and his closest friends. On the part of the abolitionist—among whom the writer was one—it was the prejudice against him as a candidate was so strong that they organized in opposition, and placed at the head of their ticket, by way of emphatic protest, the name of James G. Birney. It is one of the eccentricities of history, that a movement originating in sympathy with the grandfather, should lift the grandson to the highest position in the land.

There has never in this country been a sentiment more pronounced and more nearly universal than the one which only a little while ago represented opposition to the freedom of all men. The writer can recollect, several years subsequent to 1840, seeing a man who had undertaken to deliver an address against human slavery running for his life from a howling mob; and he was present when a worthy clergyman and college professor was driven from the platform and bombarded with ancient eggs for attempting the same thing. This was upon the free soil of Ohio and in a locality which became overwhelmingly anti-slavery in its political preferences, being now strongly republican. Indeed not long after the occurrence just spoken of, the writer attended a meeting in the neighborhood that had witnessed them, which was presided over by the leaders of one of the mobs, and who was charged with supplying the eggs used on this occasion, at which anti-slavery declarations far more radical than the persecuted lecturers of a few years before had ever thought of uttering were cheered to the very echo. Nor was New York City behind in its illiberal views. A convention of anti-slavery men and women were chased out of a public hall in Chatham street; and the house of Arther Tappan, a leading merchant and an excellent citizen, was broken in because he was known to be in sympathy with "the fanactics," invaded by a mob, and furniture, books, and even family heirlooms were carried into the street to swell the volume of the processions that paraded Broadway in 1840, in support of the senior Harrison, of which doubtless there were several, given vocal expression to its feeling on the subject of freeing the negroes,—of whom, by the way, a goodly number were in the Harrison procession of 1888,—its marching refrain would have been "No—no—no free men?"

Nor strange as such a sentiment now appears, was there anything very remarkable about it, when we examine into its origin and support. It represented the influence of a combination of rich men laboring together for a common interest. It was the work of a plutocracy. There were in the United States about 400,000 slave-owners, who thought that their financial salvation depended upon undisturbed enjoyment of their human property. To that end they directed all their resources. They used their social powers, their trade influence, their political energies. Their success was a wonderful illustration of what can be accomplished under a democratic government—even our own government—by a comparatively limited number of individuals possessing great wealth, which they are ready to use freely in behalf of a common cause, although that cause may be an utterly selfish one, and in conflict with our ordinary institutions and the principles of our institutions. The 400,000 slaveholders, although they occupied but a portion of the national territory, and even there were in a decided minority, were able for a considerable period to control not only the administration but the sympathy of the whole country. They dominated the press, the pulpit, and the legislature. They ruled the church and state. A noted ecclesiastical council composed of leading representatives of the north and south religious denominations, that assembled near where the writer lived when a boy, patiently listened to an argument to prove biblical authority for human ownership, and, at its conclusion, adopted by a decided vote, a resolution indorsing the view thus presented. Not one of its members owned a slave or lived where a slave was owned. The writer recollects listening, about that time to a devoted divine who, in the midst of a public discussion, after a fervent passage in praise of human liberty, paused to assure his hearers that he did not intend his remarks to apply to the negroes, who were manifestly designed by their Creator for a life of bondage, and then went on with his sermon. This was on free soil. But everywhere in this country the slaveholders potential, although, with all their wealth, they were never accused of directly controlling the elections by the use of money. They put men in office, and they put men out of office, almost as they pleased. Hence the servility to their behests of so many of the officials representing free states, whose conduct won for them the contemptuous designation of "Dough faces" from their abolitionist constituents. Under the fugitive slave law they even made us a nation of negro-catchers. Their tyranny led to a revolt, of course, but their power was not wholly broken until they had compelled some millions of their fellow-citizens whose interests were really antagonistic to theirs, not only to rally round upon their government and their flag, but many of them to lay down life itself for their cause. This shows what a moneyed combination may accomplish.

Now, if there is a liberty that is invaluable to us it is the liberty to trade—the liberty to buy and sell. In fact, there can be no personal freedom without it. No stronger point ever was made in an argument than the one addressed to the English people by Richard Colden—and why is it not as pertinent for a Republican—when in advocating free trade at the conclusion of the seventh movement for negro emancipation on British soil, he declared that the man who is not allowed to buy what he wishes for what he wants and as he pleases is not free. "If it be said that he may do, 'to speak a man and make him work for nothing, it is equally criminal to say from a tree that the fruit is the reward of his labor." Of what account are wages or other earnings if we are not permitted to buy with them what we need, and as a general thing, of what use is property if we are not allowed to sell it where and as we choose?

The history of commerce has been the history of human freedom. Of this assertion we need no better support than the story of ancient Egypt. I quote from a distinguished writer of the last century a passage from the account of Egypt existing there five or six hundred years ago. In speaking of the common people he says:

"It was a rare favor when they were allowed to sell to any applicant their feudal lord that part of their harvest which they did not need for their support. The common people could not engage in commerce, because the seigniors had assumed the right to forbid all buying and selling among private persons, so long as the lords had any home products for sale. This monopoly was so common that the people came to consider it an act of magnanimity when the liege lord consented to the less crying injustice to receive a ration number of weeks each year, during which the humble commoners should buy exclusively from him. During this period of the year the lords fixed their own prices, and we can imagine what that meant. Another act of grace it was, when the people were permitted to sell spelled field and garden products during these weeks of prohibition."

It is no wonder that the writer above quoted speaks of the condition of the common people as "one of indescribable wretchedness." There was no such thing as freedom in Egypt—the masses were practically slaves to the barons. Not that their masters bought and sold them. Not at all. They simply decided how they should buy and sell. That was enough. Like certain distinguished politicians of our own land, they were content to regulate the markets, and did not care a fig for the mere cuss. "No—no—no free trade!" was their motto.

The liberation of Europe from feudal servitude was achieved, not by her kings, nor by her priests, nor yet by her philosophers. It was the work of her merchants fighting unity, the banner of free trade. Their interests brought them into conflict with the iron will of the barons. They wanted to deal directly with the common people, and they resolved to fight for the privilege. Finding that they were not strong enough to carry on the conflict individually, they confederated; they formed "combines." Several leagues or guilds were organized among them, the strongest being that of the Hansa, or league of the free cities of Germany. These trades went so far as to create armies and fleets. They declared for freedom of commerce on both land and water. They did not wait to be attacked. They went before the feudal lords—the revenue collectors of that day—established their strongholds, stormed and captured their castles, and then said to the people that they were at liberty to trade with whomsoever they pleased. Travellers up and down the Rhine have wondered at the numerous ruins of old fortresses scattered along the romantic stream. They were once strongholds, and it was the business of their occupants to levy duties on the traffic that followed that route. The Hanseatic merchants declared that the Rhine was one of natural highways for commerce, and the baron-homes were suppressed. The wealth of northern Europe were invested with pirates. The Scandinavian sea kings or vikings were then in full operation. They were excellent as a set of cut-throats and blackguards as ever sentinled a lady's castle or waylaid a traveler. Their practice was to tax all commerce that came in their way, and they were believers in a high tariff. The Hansentic ships sought out their nests and routed them, and since then the vikings have lived only in song and story. Those sturdy free traders of the middle ages were not afraid even to grapple with kings. When the ruler of Denmark established certain offensive trade restrictions they went out against him, conquered his capital, and sent him into exile. They deposed the kings of Sweden and Norway for a time, and they put the sovereign of England on his good behavior. The fruits of these operations are thus enumerated by the writer already quoted from:

"Labor and industry became honored; humble tradesmen burghers became rich and influential. The treasures that had been extorted from them by knight-robbers flowed back into the coffers of economical and thrifty citizens. Whole towns grew rich; the individually feeble number of inhabitants increased astonishingly, and then followed, as a natural sequence of wealth and thrift, the first beginnings of science and literature, which was carefully and lovingly nursed. Poetry and art fled from the castles of the rude lords into the burgs, and found safe asylums among the burghers. And at last schools were established."

Such have been the results of trade, not of trade hampered and burdened in the interests of a relentless and intended to confer monopolistic privileges, but of free trade as the winds and waves that move the ocean, and as universal in its operations and beneficialities.

Nor did its blessings stop with the overthrow of feudalism. It is a significant fact that all, or nearly all, the great public improvements looking to commercial development which at one time have been undertaken by people outside of the national limits, not excepting our own advantage as for the benefit of all mankind, like the Suez and Panama canals, have been the work of free-trade communities, the money for them coming from surpluses, not in their national treasuries, but in their peoples' pockets.

And in connection with this it will be no harm to look, from what quarter or quarters comes the money that is being put into foreign enterprises? Whence comes the capital that is buying up our properties? Strange to say, it comes from England, free trade England and a great deal of it, if not the greater part, from the accumulations of her laboring class. They who, according to our theories, ought to be slowly starving to death, are rapidly acquiring our choicest investments; while our own agriculturalists, under the beneficent reign of protection, are engaged in putting another layer of mortgages on their farms. Little Englandism,—rather then many of our states,—that kicked protection into the sea over forty years ago, is to-day not only the world's principal carrier and merchant, but her greatest capitalist and banker.

But is feudalism dead? Let us see. What is the difference between the practice of the mediæval barons, already described, in levying tolls on their subjects when buying or selling, to deal only with them, and their present system of government? The American people are no longer at liberty to buy where they please, sell where they please, and for what purpose, of our protective tariff is to compel us to purchase home manufactures, it is freely admitted that we can get many things we need cheaper in foreign markets, only protection by building up a wall of taxation against foreign commodities, forces us to purchase home products from the domestic makers on practically their own terms. It looks very much like feudalism, when expelled from the Old World, had taken root in the New, and that the Seigniorial lords quite as selfish as those of the olden time. They have not only captured our legislative markets, but they have undertaken to dominate another in some respects even more important, namely, the labor market. They have crushed American shipping, which ought to give employment to hundreds of thousands of our countrymen, and surrendered the sea with all the traffic and treasures to free-trade England. They have so obstructed our ports with custom duties that many articles cannot enter at all, and have otherwise crippled and hampered our foreign trade, which, in its normal development, would furnish nearly as much employment as all our factories do. In this there is nothing incomprehensible. Imperialism is in direct conflict with the protectionist idea of exclusiveness and monopoly. Imperialism is invariably the ally of free trade. These traders want no fair as to create armies and fleets. They declared for freedom of commerce on both land and water. They did not wait to be attacked. BOULANGER, DILLON AND ROCHEFORT

The Three Men Sentenced to Be Deported to a Fortified Place.

The French Senate Court has found Count Dillon and Henri Rochefort accomplices of Gen. Boulanger in a fabulous attempt against the safety of the state. It was decided by a vote of 190 to 97 that the act charged in the indictment against the accused in connection with the presidential crisis in 1887 constituted a treasonable attempt. The court found Gen. Boulanger guilty on the charge of embezzling funds, and refused to allow that there were extenuating circumstances. The court then sentenced Gen. Boulanger, Count Dillon and Henri Rochefort to be deported to a fortified place.

SOLDIER BOYS DESERT.

Measures to He Taken to Make Army Life More Endurable.

The War Department officials have been recently giving their attention to the causes which deprecate the army. From late statistics it is shown that the evil is largely on the increase. During the six months ending June 30, 1889, the records show an increase of 135 over the number reported for the corresponding period of last year. For the last six months of the present year there were 1,567 desertions, about 1,209 for the same period of 1888. Fully seven-eighths of the desertions took place during the first year of enlistment. The importance of these figures is appreciated by General Schofield and Adjutant General Kelton, and some plan of action which will look toward the modification of the existing articles of war will receive their earnest advocacy and be presented to Congress. Quite a number of officers believe that one of the best ways to break up desertion in the army would be to put a stop to the soldiers doing so much extra work. When a man enters the army he expects to become a soldier. When he finds that, in addition to his duty of a soldier, he has to do all the work around the garrison and officers' quarters, the soldier feeling dies out and he deserts at the first opportunity, generally in the first year of his enlistment.

NATURAL GAS MAIN EXPLODES.

Two Men Instantly Killed and Many Injured at Pittsburg, Pa.

The terrific explosion of a natural gas main at Pittsburg resulted in killing two men instantly, fatally injuring two more, and seriously injuring some fifteen others. The contractors were testing a thirty-inch natural gas main before turning on the natural gas by means of compressed air. They ran the pressure up to seventy-five pounds per square inch, when the dead cap on the end of the pipe blew out, scattering debris in every direction. Several hundred workmen, employed in the iron mills near by, were just returning home, and a number of them had stopped to watch the experiment. They were struck by the debris and flying missiles. The workmen and spectators were thrown down, and one man was buried against a brick house and his neck broken. An investigation showed that two men had been killed outright and about fifteen others injured, two of them fatally. The dead were conveyed to their homes and the injured, who were unable to walk, taken to a hospital.

INDIGNITY TO JUSTICE FIELD REFUSES IN DAVID TERRY'S DEATH.

Sarah Althea Hill's Husband Killed in California, by a Deputy Marshal While Attacking the United States Supreme Court Justice—The Story Under Edgar.

Upon the arrival of the Southern overland train at Lathrop, Cal., on the morning of the 14th, United States Supreme Judge Stephen J. Field, of the Ninth Circuit States Marshal David Nagle walked into the depot dining room for breakfast and s t down side by side. Soon after Judge David Terry and his wife came in also. They were pre-ending to an other table when Mrs. Terry, evidently recognizing Justice Field, did not sit down, but retired to the train forsome reason unknown. Before she reached it, however, and as soon as she had left the dining room, Judge Terry approached Justice Field and, stooping over him, slapped his face. At this instant Deputy Marshal Nagle arose from his seat and shot Judge Terry through the heart. As he was falling the Deputy Marshal shot again, but missed him. The bullet going through the floor. Both shots were fired in very quick succession.

The Judge never uttered a sound after being shot. Judge Terry had hardly fallen to the floor when he lifted his side of his body and threw herself upon him. Terry expired in a few minutes. People rushed from the dining-room and attempted to remove the wife, but Justice Field and Deputy Marshal Nagle retreated to another room, where they were securely locked within, while Mrs. Terry called upon the citizens to arrest them.

Before the train pulled out Constable Walker entered the sleeper, and was carried away on hearing the news. Terry confessed the spectators that he knew his duty and would perform it.

During the time the train was standing at the depot Mrs. Terry was running wildly alternately from the body of her husband to the sleeper, and during her absence it was whispered that she might slap Justice Field's face, and that a sympathetic lynching that they might be detained until the excitement died down. In response to the entreaty of Constable Walker the train stopped and Nagle and a Deputy of Stanislaus County had taken charge of Judge Field, the United States Marshal Nagle.

After the shooting Deputy Marshal Nagle backed up against the wall of the dining room, and, with his hand on his pistol, stepped to the door to arrest him, saying he was a United States officer in discharge of his duty. There was no attempt made by the crowd to molest him at any time. Constable Walker took Deputy Nagle into his buggy at Tracy and proceeded with him to Stockton, where he was held to answer.

The fact that protection was accorded Justice Field, of the United States Supreme Court, it is claimed, was by authority of Attorney General Miller. He telegraphed from Washington to the Marshal of the district to see that the person of the Justice was protected. The order from the Department of Justice at Washington to the United States Marshal for the protection of protection to the person of Justice Field was sent to Stanton Sawyer, of the United States Circuit Court.

A STRANGE TRAGEDY.

TWO MICHIGAN OFFICERS SHOT DOWN DOING THEIR DUTY.

An Attempt by Charles T. Wright to Prevent the Seizure of His Logs for Payment of Taxes Results Fatally to Two Men—The Murderer in Custody.

A Frankfort (Mich.) dispatch says: The steamer Dewar returned from Otter Lake yesterday on board Sheriff Case and a posse, also C. T. Wright, who killed Officers Marshall and Thurber Saturday night. The story of Deputy Sheriff Marshall, which is now lying at Watson's undertaking rooms, is being prepared for burial.

The trouble which culminated so tragically Saturday originated years ago in the refusal of Wright, ex president of the Otter Lake Lumber Company, and Thomas Wright, ex president of the Wisconsin and Michigan Lumber Company, to pay taxes on his mill property, which is located in Aral township. The town has never questioned its right to the taxes, but Wright's steady refusal to pay them and his influence over the rather rough men in his employ made collection a very difficult task. Three weeks ago he sheriff seized a number of logs belonging to the Otter Lake company, and Charles T. Wright made several determined efforts to regain possession of the stick, but failed, owing to his inability to furnish what the authorities deemed a good and sufficient indemnity bond. In consequence of this failure, he was in a very bad humor at the time. Wright put in an appearance at the mill with a force of men Saturday morning, and he would have possession of the logs. Under Sheriff Marshall and Supervisor Thurber, accompanied by a few men guarding the property in the interests of the Otter Lake company, had to decide Wright from doing anything lawfully. Wright would not listen to reason, and ordered his men to release the logs and to chase the men who interfered. Marshall and Thurber drew their revolvers and in the name of the State ordered the mob to disperse and not to molest in any way the property of Wright. Wright's men fell back. Wiesenpun Wright himself, with his wife, came on the ground and the logs and the under sheriff discharged his weapon into the air. The lawless action was answered by Wright, who shot to kill, and at the first report Officer Fred Case, who was the brave, Marshall called upon his men to arr st Wright, and uphold the law. A moment later he too, fell, mortally wounded. Wright then ran for his life, but Wright some encouragement by their friends, who had gathered in the town before its arrival perpetrator, and fell back, leaving Case and Marshall walked away, cursing his Martini rifle, which, he said, had never failed him in a mill, his friends joining him as a plaining that the cartridges.

The news of the murder and the promiscuous shooting at Otter Lake created wildfire over the country. The sheriff on arriving at the scene of the tragedy assembled over 200 heavy settlers with a fixed determination to hang the murderer. The crowd learned that he had knew Wright's hiding place, he was said to be in the woods, and they were searching heaving line of the propeller Dewar which was tied up at the dock, was hung up to a pine tree until nearly strangled, and let down to get his story. THE TALL SYCAMORE.

SENATOR VOORHEES, OF INDIANA, INTERVIEWED.

His Views on Protection—A Parable and a Fable Applied—Who Profits by Monopolies—The Tariff Plunderers Denounced.

"The best successes of my political life," said Senator D. W. Voorhees to a Chicago Herald reporter who interviewed him at Terre Haute, "have been in the times when paupers and men defending national evils have said their worst things about me. I am now charged with using harsh terms toward the millionaire monopolists of the country in a speech at Bloomington the other day. That reminds me of a story. You remember the case of the boy found stealing apples in an old man's orchard. Well, while the owner used soft words and tufts of grass to old lodge the plunderer, the boy only laughed and taunted the owner. When, however, the old man exercised a little of his real force and strength, the coin changed tones and cried, 'Oh, that boy was an infant industry in another man's orchard. He and his kind would have seen monopolized the whole crop. If there had been a high protective tariff to keep the rightful owner away, what a high old time that young robber could have had! And yet the old man put in an appearance this sturdy, dishonest infant industry had no idea of abandoning either perch or plunder. How dreadfully abused and wronged he must have felt when the rightful owner was restored to possession! No wonder he called the old man an anarchist and denounced him as an enemy to the Government; or, failing in all else, he may even have made faces at the old man. That is what protectionists do nowadays.

"The moral is, that tariff plunderers now do not intend to stop their dishonest ways the fruits of labor. They are appealed to and agreed with in vain. They are willing to stand up and defend their clutch on every necessary of life, from food to fuel, from shelter to the coarse clothing. If I have been conservative in the past it does not imply inconsistency now that now, having exhausted mild measures, I use harsher words and contract sterner measures to secure justice for the people. The time for gentle means with public plunderers has gone by. The question now is whether the laboring people of the United States will power to govern or be governed by the power of money to control the labor of the hard pinched classes under unjust laws. That is the question from now on, and hard words will not be used in its discussion.

"Has the character of tariff doctrine changed since the Democratic party was in power?

"Yes.

"The ideas of Henry Clay on the tariff are no more in harmony with Republican policy to-day than are the ideas of Washington in regard to the tariff and the Bank of the United States. Henry Clay's tariff was to be temporary, and was intended to be temporary, and in no case over 50 per cent. The Republican tariff is permanent, and often exceeds 100 per cent. It does not depend on the needs of revenue. Its aim is to keep up the protection of the manufacturer. This bold, bad, and dangerous policy is defended at the expense of another is wrong, and will be met at all times with the resistance of every person who knew their cause is just. This later idea of protection allows Andrew Carnegie to grind the faces of the poor, to oppress the laborer, to reduce and increase prices of necessaries. They devour widows' houses, and wind their prayers for the sanction of pitiful music halls for the poor. Of such the Savior of mankind was said: 'They shall receive greater damnation.' Carnegie's income is estimated at $4,000,000 a day, or, as here, $2.80 a minute. He gets more money for one minute's work than the average laborer for one hour, more for a whole long day's labor. Here is the protected industry—our Pittsburg, where labor lives that was to have been protected.

"Monopolies are wrong, and they justify, black with sore, painless, carpetless, comfortless, cheerless, starving, and dreadful places to live in. The bare hills of Ireland are a home, a home for which the hot sun turns the dense air fetid, and the cold winds cut like knives as they wash through them. The bare, brown dooryard, the bare, brown door, the bare stoop, the bales wound from the open doorway, the frowsy bed standing by the door, and the sad, hopeless expression of a countenance life in plain view of the passers-by, the bare cupboard, and three to Sanbusky. The export comprised 9,295,000 feet of lumber, 500,000 lath and 21 cords of wood.

—A fatal shooting affair occurred in the town of Kawkawlin, Bay County, during the progress of a dance one night last week. The parties were Frank Wright and Charles T. Wright made several determined efforts to regain possession of the stick, but failed, owing to his inability to furnish what the authorities deemed a good and sufficient indemnity bond. In consequence of this failure, he was in a very bad humor at the time. Wright put in an appearance at the mill with a force of men Saturday morning, and he would have possession of the logs. Under Sheriff Marshall and Supervisor Thurber, accompanied by a few men guarding the property in the interests of the Otter Lake company, had to decide Wright from doing anything lawfully. The lawless action was answered by Wright, who shot to kill, and at the first report Officer Fred Case, who was the brave, Marshall called upon his men to arr st Wright, and uphold the law. FARMING MACHINERY.

WHAT INVENTION AND IMPROVEMENT HAVE CONE FOR FARMERS.

The Farmer's Work and Tools of a Generation Ago Contrasted with Those of Today—Farmers' Wives and Household Tools—A Grand Display of Farm Machinery and Implements of the Latest and Best Styles.

No class of people have been more benefited by modern invention and improvements in machinery and tools than farmers and their families. It is only the plain truth to say that the lives and work of farmers have been revolutionized within the last fifty years by invention and improvements in machinery and implements. The present generation cannot realize what was the condition of farmers and their families fifty years ago. Many of the old men can remember when the whole outfit of a pretty good farmer and his family was about this: One lumber wagon, old style, heavy and rough; one or two plows, also rude and heavy; one drag or harrow; ax, spade, hoe (heavy), hay fork, hand rake, sheep shears, home-made flails; one chain for wagon, plow and harrow; one hanging chain; cradle and scythe, to cut grain and grass by hand labor; one iron wedge to split rails; two iron rings for a maul (make the maul yourself); a few carpenter's tools (every farmer was his own carpenter); cast iron shoes for a sled or sleigh (make the sleigh yourself, and make it heavy and strong enough for logging with); harness, if you had horses, home-made yoke for oxen. The farmer's wife was lucky if she had a churn. Generally she had to use a tall crock, over which her husband fitted a wooden cover with a hole in it for a home-made dasher, to be pounded up and down; a cook stove sometimes, but often only a rude chimney fire-place; and a cheap coffee and spice mill. That was then a pretty good outfit, so far as machinery and tools go. Pioneer farming can still be done with such an outfit, only better in quality; but it means from daylight till dark, and then an hour or two of chores and odd jobs by the firelight or the light of a tin lantern with a tallow dip. Besides, the farmer's wife often in those days had a spinning wheel and loom, and had to make the cloth for the family wear, and then serve as dressmaker, milliner and tailoress for the whole family, men and women, boys and girls, alike. Her duties were few; tea-pots and pans few, and heavy, and rude; her toil longer and more incessant than her husband's.

In those days there were no steam or machine threshers; no machine reapers, mowers and binders; no improved harrows, seed cutters and breakers; no cultivators, seed and grain drills, railroad plows, corn hoders and shellers; no mills for grinding feed; no variety of improved chilled plows for different kinds of work; no hay or straw cutters; no machine saws for cutting wood; no portable steam engines; no windmills for pumping water; no sewing machines, improved churns, fine stoves with their endless variant furniture; no knitting machines; no apple peelers, cherry stoners, raisin seeders, nor any of the thousand and one household machines and implements that now make woman's work easy and swift. The life of the whole family on a farm was an unending round of

DRUDGERY LIKE SLAVES.

Now how changed! The genius of invention and the hands of improvement have touched and remodeled all the old things, and added scores of new things. Even the simplest tools—the spade, hoe, fork, rake, have become light, elegant, strong and cheap—wonderfully different from what they were in the old times. The elegant, clean, light steel plows of today, and the dozens of different harrows, would seem like a dream of fairy land to one of the old pioneers, if he could be resurrected. And especially the new inventions of farm machinery and farm tools would astonish him beyond measure. And his good wife would be equally, or even more, astonished at the household outfit of her modern successor, with its dozens of new and fine labor saving contrivances, comforts and even luxuries of convenience and use.

Every year adds to invention and improvements in farm machinery and implements. In fact, the farmer and his wife and family are constantly more and more and machinists, instead of merely rude agricultural laborers, as their fathers were. The operations of farm life take on more and more the character of manufactures or mechanical pursuits, thus uplifting intelligence, broadening life, and requiring additional knowledge and skill of hand and brain.

Every farmer' fair has now-a-days, become as much of a show of machines and tools as of agricultural or animal products. In fact the show of implements and machinery is often the most important and generally the most instructive and attractive part of a great farmers' fair. The place where farmers can see all sorts of machines in operation, and compare their merits, and all sorts of tools for his use, and select those which are best for his occupation, and learn much labor saving devices and improvements as will best insure his financial success as well as ease and rapidity of his work, is the place that is to him most instructive, attractive and useful. But it is only at

A Fire Proof Paper.

A German patent has been granted M. Ludewigg for a much needed article—a fire and water proof paper. It is made by mixing twenty-five parts of asbestos with twenty-five or thirty parts of aluminum sulphate, moistening with zinc chloride, and, after washing, treating the pulp with a solution of one part of resin soap and eight to ten parts of aluminum sulphate. Paper is then produced as with ordinary pulp.—New York Telegram Weathercocks.

At Bishopsstone church, in Hereford shire, the vane is in the form of a gridiron, this being the symbol of the cruel death of St. Lawrence. Is it "patron saint" of the place.

The towers of Swiss halls are frequently furnished with five vanes, a central one higher than the rest, and one at each angle. Sometimes the initial letters of the four points are placed midway between the vanes. We know the market place of a small border town, pebble paved, with a tall market cross raised on nine steps near the center of it. There is still a large square stone among the pebbles, where blood used to be baited, tied to the ring upon it. There is still an annual procession of men to it on horseback, carrying halberds, to proclaim a fair. There is still a bevy of pleasant country women clustered in it every Saturday, who have brought butter and eggs for sale from the distant farms among the hills and moors. It is always cool, quiet and gray, with the surrounding houses looking down upon it pensively. Among these houses, on the west side, stands the town hall, with an archway running right through it for foot passengers, and on top of the hall rises a central tower, with the vanes all common shaped.

Curiously, in country residences, the vane is generally placed in the stable yard, either on the bell clock turret or on the louvred ventilator.

As these notes have raised our eyes to objects above the ordinary level, we may notice the ornamental ridge tiles which large steep roofs are generally furnished, as they have an origin not generally known. In early times our predecessors placed turfs or clods on the upper edges of the slanting sides of the rough roofs to keep out the rain at their junction. Out of these lumps of earth clusters of flowers and weeds grew freely. Anxious to retain the outlines thus made, our more recent ancestors handed down their remembrance of these wild home ornaments in the ceramental foliage of the ornamental clay ridge now in common use.—Quiver.

He Got His Half.

Capt. John Allen was one of the famous men of the times when the British held possession of Penobscot bay, in the early part of this century. He was prescued with a scow for gallant conduct in capturing a British privateer. Many stories have been told about the dashing captain, and a new one is now related by the Brooklyn correspondent of The Maine Desert Herald. While the English were in Castine, commanded by Gen. Goulin, Capt. John had occasion to visit that town. He was accompanied by his wife Sally. As the road near the town neck he met the general out on a hunting excursion. Recognizing at once the general kept the middle of the road, expecting Capt. John to step out. But our redoubtable captain only gave the customary half and when they met there was a halt. After a moment's pause Gen. Goulin commanded him to turn out and let him pass, saying: "Do you know who I am?" "No," thundered Capt. John. "Well," he replied, "I am Gen. Goulin." At that Capt. John's ire reached fever heat. "Get up, Sally," said he, and from under the seat he drew the old sword. Unsheathing it, he waved it aloft and said: "Do you know who I am?" Somewhat surprised at what he saw, Gen. Goulin answered: "No." "Well," said he, "I am Capt. John Allen, and I am going to take half the road!" And he immediately got it.—Lewiston Journal.

Peculiar Snow Storms.

There is a record of blood snow in Walpole, N. H., but snow of this color appears to be somewhat rare. There is little mystery about those peculiar snow storms, however, since microscopic investigations have shown them at times proven them to be caused by vast quantities of microscopic minerals, shells of infusoria, or parts of plants or insects. Infusorial shells and spores of plants of especial shapes have been identified after having passed the ocean and been carried in dust storms, thus tracing the course of the aerial currents. Ehrenberg is said to have found not less than 320 different species of organisms in the dust of various showers, of which 108 were of marine origin. Humboldt and Lizel, Maury have also treated largely on this topic. The same general explanation that accounts for these showers applies also to the fall of living organisms which have been previously mentioned. There seem to be little doubt that winds, whirlwinds and waterspouts are the chief cause of these phenomena. The several fish showers that have been recorded were all preceded or accompanied by heavy rain or a violent wind, forming what is termed an land a whirlwind or at sea a waterspout.—Cor. Globe-Democrat.

Hypnotizing by Telephone.

Dr. Pinel, of Paris, is said to have succeeded in hypnotizing several subjects by means of the phonograph. All the commands given through this channel were, he declares, as readily obeyed as if they had been given to him directly, and suggestions of every possible character with respect to the matter conveyed through the medium of the machine as if made viva voce. The conclusion which he deduced from his experiments is that the received theory of a magnetic influence exerted from the operator to the subject is entirely baseless; that the real cause of the phenomena of hypnotism is nervous derangement on the part of those subject to them.—Chicago Tribune.

Slightly Forgetful.

Absent mindedness seems to be gaining ground, and I am not sure but that it may some day rise to the dignity of a national disease. A friend of mine who also is much of a traveler in a business way, tells me of an instance that came under his observation while he was passing through Dakota on the cars recently. At the station at which there was a man with his wife and family and baggage awaiting the train, the train did not stop long enough for the train and left his family to talk business with him, promising to come back into the station for them before the train started on. Meantime the baggage was put aboard. The locomotive bell rung, the conductor shouted "all aboard," and the man of business, after shaking hands with his friend, deliberately stepped aboard a car and went floundering through the train toward the smoker, where he took out his pipe and had a comfortable smoke. He had forgotten that he was encumbered by any wife and family dependent on a wife and family, and the train had passed Mandan before it occurred to him that there was something missing. The feelings of doubt and despair that overcame his wife in the meantime are better imagined than described. But there was no divorce suit instituted. The man left the cars at the first convenient station and got back to Dakota—he has not said how—and found his wife safe and happy and the train of baggage safe and sound.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

THE GRAPEVINE SWING.

BY SAMUEL W. PECK.

When I was a boy on the old plantation,
Up in the deep woods and hollows,
The fairest spot of all creation,
Under the Indiana skies,
When the wind came over the cotton and corn,
To the home site we found it a spring,
With brown fox-brush and a fan-palm top,
And among the grapevine swing.

Swinging in the grapevine swing,
Laughing up in the wild birds sing—
I dream and sigh
For the days gone by,
Swinging in the grapevine swing.

Out—out in the fragrant June breeze and bright,
Back to the moss-grown trees,
I should be launched with a heart as light
As a wild rose tossed by the breeze;
The world was all of the sweet, smooth glade,
Its joys—as far as a child's range
I was—not as your heaven as I wanted to be,
Swinging in the grapevine swing.

Swinging in the grapevine swing,
Laughing where the wild birds sing—
Oh, to be a boy,
With a heart full of joy,
Swinging in the grapevine swing.

I'm weary at noon. I'm weary at night,
Of the city's ceaseless din;
And care is ever my book with white
As I wend through its fevered mart,
I'm tired of the world, with its pride and pomp,
And fame seems a worthless thing;
I'm better it all for one day's romp,
And a swing on the grapevine swing.

Swinging in the grapevine swing,
Laughing where the wild birds sing—
I would I were a boy
From the world today,
Swinging in the grapevine swing.

THE PREACHER'S STORY;

The Tale of a Pet Cat.

BY GEORGE WASHINGTON WINTHROP

I AM glad to see you after your vacation."

"I trust you enjoyed the holiday recess to the fullest," was the response.

These salutations passed between two college students as they first met at the close of the holiday vacation. The young men, Wilbur Grant and John Collins, were typical students of that period. They were toiling without means at their command to gain a college education, just as thousands are doing in this year of the land. They would teach for a term or two or work for a man in the manual labor until they would accumulate fifty or a hundred dollars, and with this sum they would resume their studies in college. If at the close of the term they found themselves without money, or, indeed, considerably in debt they were not discouraged. They saw only one thing to do. They must go to work and cancel the debt and accumulate another small sum, so as to join their classes again or drop into the one behind. Be it said, to the honor of thousands of young men, that they are not discouraged by the fact that they have no money. They persevere until they acquire an education, even though it costs them the loss of their self-denial.

Wilbur Grant was a young man scarcely out of his teens. His companion was one of the oldest men in the college. He had perhaps reached his thirtieth year. He was a teacher and a preacher, and, feeling the need of more preparation for his work, he had entered college at a late day. The two students were not on intimate terms at all, though good friends. A few years before John Collins had taught the winter school in a rural district known as Black Jack. A year or two later Wilbur Grant had taught in the same place. Thus they had many friends in common in that community, and occasionally, as they met, they indulged in reminiscences of their pedagogical days.

"Where have you been this time, Grant?" asked his friend after the salutations mentioned.

"I have been over to Black Jack, eating turkey with some of our old friends," was the reply. "By they way, Collins, you have a good many friends in that district and they always ask about you."

"How is our old friends Higgins?"

"He begins to show age," was the reply. "He must be sixty years old, and his wife is not much younger."

"He has lost nothing of his religious zeal, has he?" asked Collins?

"You may be sure that he has not," was the response. "I believe that he is as true a man in all the relations of life as I ever saw. His piety is no sham. It takes hold of his very life, and he shows it in everything he does. He still goes out to the old log meeting-house, and sits on one of those hard benches through the service, wholly oblivious of everything except the worship of God. You know that in his younger days he was a leader of their singing. His voice is cracked now, so that he cannot sing much; but I doubt not his spirit soars aloft and joins the redeemed in singing praises to God."

"I can agree with all you say touching his manly, Christian character," said Collins. "I looked with him one term and saw him under almost all circumstances. I saw him at church, at home, in the field, in the barnyard, and in the most trying places, and his religion never failed him."

"Did I ever tell you how our morning devotions were once interrupted so far as I was concerned by old Tom?" asked Grant.

"You mean the old cat, I suppose?" was the response. "You never told me about it, but I am acquainted with the old cat and his pranks. Let us hear it."

"Come on, boys, and listen. Grant is going to tell a cat story. I suppose it will outdo Burt Harte's poem." This remark was made by one of a group of students standing near who had overheard some of the previous conversation.

"Now, boys, this is hardly fair. I did not intimate that I had a story to tell to the crowd. Besides, I am not given to painting a story in bright colors. I was only going to relate an incident that happened while I was teaching school in the country."

"Of course he will give nothing but the bare facts," remarked one of the bystanders. "We can allow our imagination to fill out the rest."

"Now, boys, what I am going to tell is strictly true," said Grant. "It is not wonderful, either, but it was a most trying place for me for a few moments. You see, I was boarding with this family that we have been talking about. Besides the old man and his wife there was one son about eighteen years old. I was then only seventeen. I found it necessary to maintain a certain amount of dignity in order to govern this young man in school. For the most part we were good friends, but sometimes he would be inclined to take advantage of me in the schoolroom. I did not hesitate to rebuke him. I wanted the school to see that I was not partial toward one at my boarding place. A little exposure like this would cause considerable coolness between us, but in time it would always disappear. I found it necessary not to be too intimate with him in order to be master of the situation in school hours. Indeed, I went to the school-room every morning with fear and trembling, as I had over sixty names on the roll. Some of the pupils had been soldiers in the army. Many of them were older than I. This has nothing to do with the story, however.

"Well, the house where I boarded had a large fire-place. The old man and his son Jim would make a big log heap in the fireplace, and that carpetless room was a most cheerful place of an evening. The light from the fireplace was generally the only light we had. I was very much inclined to read every evening, but the old folks retired at 8 o'clock, and they kept up the only room that had fire. There was nothing for Jim and me to do but to go up-stairs to bed at that early hour.

"How about the cat?" interrupted some one.

"Oh! don't confuse me. I am getting to that. I wanted to get my bearings first. As we sat around the big open fire, each one had his place. The old man sat in one corner, next to the window. The old lady sat on the opposite side of the fireplace. Jim and I sat between the two. I usually sat next to the old man. The cat was a great pet. He was a fine, large animal—one that would attract attention anywhere. His regular place was behind the fire. Whenever he got tired of lying there he would jump on some one's lap. He was generally a welcome visitor, but I did not encourage him to be specially intimate with me.

"Once, when we were in the midst of the morning devotions and the old man was pouring forth a fervent prayer, Jim gave me a nudge, implying that he wanted me to look at something. I turned my face toward him, and he then pointed toward his father. I naturally turned my eyes in that direction. The old man was on his knees praying, as I have said, and the old cat sat on his lack as quietly as if it were her accustomed place.

"The whole scene was very amusing to me, but I dared not laugh. I had the utmost respect for the old man's religion, and I would not have manifested the least levity for anything in the world. Besides, I was the teacher, one of the important personages of the community, and it became me to be a model of propriety everywhere.

"I got my head down next to the back of my chair and my handkerchief to my mouth and tried to be as decent in circumstances would permit. To all outward appearances I was succeeding fairly well. If nothing else had happened I would have escaped disgrace.

"Jim gave my warning the old cat made a spring and lighted on my back. This was too much for me. Jim and I exploded simultaneously, and it was impossible to restrain the fit of laughter that took possession of us.

"I felt deeply disgraced, but I could not control myself. The two old people seemed not disturbed in the least. I do not think they even smiled. The old man continued his prayer as if nothing had happened.

"Well, that is a fair cat story; but is there no sequel to it?" asked one of the listeners.

"Now that I know of," replied Grant. "After that I was always more or less uneasy, and was careful that my back was nearly perpendicular as possible during the hour of the devotions.

"I can give you a sequel to the story," remarked Collins, "but I can tell another incident that happened in the younger days of the cat."

"Let us hear it," several cried.

"Well, I was teaching in the same district a year or two before this time and was boarding at the same place. I was somewhat more conscientious than the old man always insisted that I should take a short nap at noon after he in the morning. This order was observed without variation all winter. It was in the early spring my cat may school. The weather was so warm and balmy that we could keep the doors open even in the morning.

"We were in the midst of our devotions one morning, and the old man was praying earnestly. This time the cat came around in front of the old man, who had his eyes closed, as a matter of course, and did not see the festive feline. I cannot tell just what thoughts were passing through the cat's mind. He probably saw the old man's tongue moving, and thought it was a mouse. At all events he made a spring at the old man's face and actually clawed his tongue. There was nothing funny in this, I assure you. The old man knocked the cat clean across the room, and with the blood streaming out of his mouth, he exclaimed:

"'Scat! scat! you beast! Brother Collins, pray!'

"Do you think I prayed? It was the last thing in the world I could have done. I could not say a word. My first impulse was to get out of that room. I did not seem able to get on my feet. I just went out on all fours into the yard before I got on my feet. The whole scene was so intensely ludicrous that I would have laughed if it had killed me."

A peal of laughter greeted the speaker at the close of his story, and one of the bystanders remarked, as he turned away:

"A preacher can tell about as big a story as any one when he applies himself to the task.

"Quite a cat-a-strophe, as I actually heard a preacher once say, in describing the work of a tornado," remarked another listener.

SWEET SALLY SUCCUMBED.

Simeon Sykes' Story.

SIMEON SYKES, silver-shifter, strayed slowly southward, steadily seeking satisfactory sales, soberly sauntered, swinging satchel, systematically showing solid silver spoons, sugar shovels, small sized salvers, superior spectacles, scissors, sewing shields. Somber skies sent sight showers, soaking Simeon's satchel, shoes, stockings, shirt, skin.

Suddenly something seemed softly saying: "Sweet Sally Slater Simeon soon shall see."

So Simeon straightway strode stupendous strides, seeking Sally's sunny shelter.

Simeon soon saw sundry stately specimens standing sentinel, shading Sally's spinster's spacious shelter; spied Sally, sitting solus, swinging silk stockings, slyly snuffing sweet-scented Scotch snuff. Sudden surprise seized Sally's soul, seeing Simeon. Sally stopped Sally's sanctity soon skeddadled shamefully.

She, somewhat sensitive, suspiciously started, suddenly spilled some snuff, soiled stockings, stammered, stuttered, said: "S-s-seat, s-sir."

Simeon shivered, shook, said: "Smart shower."

Sally said: "Slightly so."

Simeon's shins seemed sore; so Sally sought some soothing salve (Sawyer's), supplied some soft-soled slippers.

Square-shouldered, slab-sided, spindle-shanked Simeon seemed satisfied.

Sally said: "Sold some silver since Sunday, Simeon?"

Simeon scoiled savagely.

Sally suggested supper.

"Sartin, Sally," said Simeon; "something sufficiently strengthening. Some strong stimulant."

So Sally sent some sausage, sirloin steak, satisfactory stew, something sweet, sagacious.

Simeon's stomach seemed satisfied; so Simeon smoked several "Spanish segars," sat stupefied, soon slept, snored sonorously.

Sally, sitting, solemnly stitching stockings, suddenly sneezed. Simeon started—seemed scared—suspiciously surveyed surrounding space, shutters, shades; seemed secure.

Sally stopped sewing, said she saw someone that resembled Simeon's silver.

Simeon, slightly susceptible, seemed suddenly smitten, sought Sally's side, sacrilegiously surrounded sanctimonious Sally Slater's smooth remains. She, somewhat suspicious, said, "Soft sickish." Simeon stared significantly, said, "Sweetest, surely such solitary souls should sympathize."

Sally stopped Simeon.

Simeon seemed subdued.

She seemed sorry, showed some softening symptoms, supinely sought Simeon's sturdy shoulder, sighed and sobs smacked Sally! So straightway surrendering, she smacked Sim!

Simeon said: "Set some suitable season." Sally said: "September." Simeon, shrugging Sally's shoulder, said: "Sooner! Surely Scripture sanctions such strong sympathy; say Sunday."

So Sally succumbed.

SCIENCE.

Seven supernal seasons softly, stealthily slipped somewhere. Seven silent seasons sprung, successively shedding sunshine, singing, shouting, seldom sick, squalling sometimes, still sweetening Sally's solitude. So, succeeding summers serenely spent, Simeon's seven stalwart sons seized soldiers' swords—successively subdued South-ern Secessionists—subsequently settled South.

Simeon still sells silver, supplying substantial substistence.—Detroit Free Press.

The Crisis at Waterloo.

All at once came the tragedy. To the left of the English and on our right the head of the column of cuirassiers reared with a fearful clamor. Arrived on the ridge, wild, furious and, running to the annihilation of the squares and cannon, the cuirassiers saw between them and the English a ditch and a grave. It was the sunken road of Ohain. It was a frightful moment. There was the ravine, unlooked for, gaping before their very horses' feet, two fathoms deep between its banks. The second rank pushed in the first and the third pushed in the second. The horses reared, fell back and struggled with their feet in the air, heaping up and overturning their riders. There was no power to retreat; the whole column was but a projectile; the momentum gathered to crush the English entered into the French. The ptiles ravine still gaped till it was filled Riders, horses, rolled in together pell-mell, mangling each other, making common flesh in this gulf, and when the grave was full of living men the rest rode over them and passed on. Almost a third of Dubois' brigade plunged into this abyss.—World of Adventure.

SCHWATKA IN MEXICO.

AMONG THE CAVE-DWELLERS OF THE SIERRA MADRES.

Their Primitive Habits of Life—Regions of Pitch and Pine to Furnish Chewing Gum for the Whole Human Race—Wild Scenery and Strange Adventures in Passing the Grand Canyon of Colorado.

I AM artistic left me at Camp Beecerra, on the second day in the Sierra Madres, writes Lieutenant Schwatka. I have now

There is a widely dispersed variety of the pitch pine in these mountains which may be said to be caskets or lazarettes of the treasures of the country. The night I spent in the pine States of the South have long formed theme of song and poetry, but those States are in the flat land coasts of our country, and the pine of the Sierra Madres is the pine of the broken land. At our camp I made upon a high potrero a little flat place in the mountain, where the grass was good for the mules, but near the spot where I had the precipitous ravine or box canyon that opened out by a gorge in a great bureau as deep and wide as the Grand Canyon of the Colorado I saw nothing to equal it.

A half-dozen men at a time, all with pitcher tackles, descended after water, to drive the mules to and from water. As they came back with their pitchers of water, the pitch pine, in the shape of torches, in fourths their length, the strange effect on the wild scenery stretching miles can be more easily conceived than described. I have said I thought the scene would have made the reputation of any artist, and I repeat it. I have never seen, in Verestchagin's "My Camp in the Himalayas" anything more striking to me. The great, wide sombreros glittering with silver, even the mules caparisoned, seemed to have more costly hats than the "four hundred" of New York—the bright red foliage of the manzanillos and the madrono trees, reinforced, relieved by the reflection of the torches, the sharp rocks of the canyon in half-mistaken, half-seen effects of contusion, stretching off to the mighty barrenness of the Grand Canyon, and, to sum up a picture that not one painter in a thousand years could have done justice to, and in one could imitate.

And to come down from the sublime to the ridiculous, we ran a mile or two down sun on saw on the trees of those sonorous, sweet-smelling pines, and, with a double handful of those "gum-drops" at the camp, we made a fire of the pitch pine torches, and, with a little water, we sat down around the fire, while for a steady hour we had a rare treat, the pitch being so full to a smart, active toy of the North Carolina variety, as to be full of pure resin, and pitch, and were it not for the fact that I had to be up at 3 in the morning I have little doubt but that the great, wide-spread, and, I may add, much-to-be ravaged pine, as I have seen so offering Washington, in the coast, in all my wanderings, would have had a little piece of a broad cut taken out of its side. Whatever may be the cause of the preservation, I know I would have had to be determined to conserve these beautiful trees if I was a mountaineer, and, for the wants of man in a country so free from the ax, I have needed little persuasion of the same too many hundreds of leagues from home.

We got away from Camp Beecerra shortly after daylight, and, commencing to ride a steady day about 10 miles, we finally got down the mountains. In a little more than a mile we came to a great gorge in the Panasco River, where a number of huge, irregular boulders had fallen from the tuned cliff. Under those that formed caves we found, we saw a number of cave-dwellers—we saw a smoking, absolutely comical in their wide-brimmed straw hats of coarse grass and their primitive brown-blouts. Their abodes are not cliff dwellings, for it not been our this white clothing at the two terms of weeks have been hard to make them out in the dark, deep covers where most of them fed upon our approach. A recently occupied cave of these cave-dwellers, north-bound, is, as I have nearly always be told by the ascending muleteers, to be found, if one will, in a dangerous place, but it has been always found for any who will look for it. We passed a large number of caves with the sign of a cross over them, which, on the outside, with the silence of death and desolation, I felt, I know, that I never been within a mile of the place, but I have not the remotest doubt but that there were a dozen people inside of each peeping out from around the rocks, and, if we had heard our approach and fed in time to keep out of our sight.

At 4 o'clock that afternoon we passed La Sierra de los Ojitos a mile to the left. The horses reared, the muleteers quickly covered to the very top with a dense forest of pine that indicates where the water divide to the east and west. On its slope grew the Mexican pine, the pine of the tents into the Gulf of Mexico, while from the opposite slope they go into the Pacific Ocean, or rather its great Mexican arm, the Gulf of California. It is the highest point of the Sierra Madre that we encountered and, looking down from it, saw the rich, north or south lines, the great, wide valleys, tanas that must have been higher, although there are no known measurements of mountains in this section of the country. Shortly after leaving the crest of the northern spur of the Sierra de los Ojitos we entered a region of box canyon, one of the most picturesque I have ever seen. I called it Cartilla Cañon, after the Governor of the State of Chihuahua, who had done a great deal to help the expedition with all the local authorities in the different parts of the States that I might visit. We camped at the first available water, which was a little spring, located at an inclination of thirty degrees on the side of the box canyon, and very well hidden, as we discovered shortly after we had down on us during the night.

From Cartilla canyon westward and south, westward the scenery steadily becomes grander and more monumental, until at time the Grand Barranca of the Cosiquiriachi is reached next morning. It is equals the Grand Canyon of the Colorado as my guide of the course of the Indian, who reached on our southward march, beautiful vistas the trail down to the Gulf of California, and, as I have said, I have never seen, in the afternoon, just as we were emerging from a dense forest of high pines and pitch pine, the sun was shining, the mountains were in the distance, and,

STRANGE EXHIBITION.

THE BEAUTIFUL AND MYSTERIOUS SECRETS OF THE WATER.

Singular Show of Fishes—Their Haunts, Habits, Breeding and Food—Wicted Effects of Colored Lights in the Water—Extraordinary Display by the State Fish Commission of Michigan.

One of the most remarkable triumphs of modern civilization is the artificial propagation and distribution of valuable food fishes. And one of the most complete and successful government establishments in the world for hatching and distributing fish, is that of the State Fish Commission of Michigan. This state has the largest coast line of any state in the union. Its fishing grounds cover the vast area of 54,000 square miles in lake waters alone, and from one-third to one-half as much more in streams and inland lakes—that is a fishing area, all told, about as large as the land of the whole state. These waters teem with the choicest fish in the world. The annual catch therefrom is of immense commercial value, and mounts into millions of dollars. Choice locations in Michigan waters constitute the and fisherman of the American continent. Among the game fish that delight the master of rod and reel are the lordly muskallunge, the gigantic Mackinaw trout and siscowet, the great salmon trout, large and small mouthed bass, brook trout, grayling, pike, catfish, perch, rock bass, pickerel, silver eels, and others; while the fame of the lakes is world wide for its large and delicate white fish, fresh water herring, etc. All these fish and waters are under the care of the state board. It is their work to keep the waters constantly replenished with fine fish.

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION—THE RESTAURANT BUILDING.

The Michigan Fish Commission have charge of

THREE LARGE HATCHERIES

maintained by the state. The largest is at Detroit, having a capacity for rearing one hundred and sixty millions of white fish yearly. One at Pelostey, with a capacity of thirty-three millions, has been discontinued. One at Paris, near Grand Rapids, for rearing brook trout, with a capacity of one and a half millions annually. There is also a corporation at Glenwood. Commissioners and the hatcheries superintendents constantly study the habits and experiment with the rearing of all sorts of valuable food fishes. Some idea of the vastness of their work may be gathered by the amount of fish they have planted in the lakes and rivers of Michigan within ten years. During this period they have stocked our waters with of 402,021,500 white fish; 8,097,000 brook trout, 12,700 carp; 176,000 scientific salmon; 4,500 bass; 59,112,000 wall-eyed pike; besides great numbers of California trout, silver eels, grayling, lake trout, salmon trout, and other valuable fishes. Many streams and small lakes that were barren have been restocked with fish in abundance, and a vast amount has been added to their value. Each year the quantity of fish bred and planted is increased. The good result is shown in the fact that the fish in the great lakes are steadily increasing, and the catch grows larger yearly.

The great work has been performed so quietly, necessarily at remote places, and as such means that the great body of the people have little or no idea of how it is done. Consequently the State Fish Commission have resolved to make of their apparatus, methods and products at the approaching Detroit International Exposition, in the form of the largest, most complete and most interesting show of fish and fish hatching ever seen in this country. There will be constructed an artificial lake of pond, with rock walls, bins, wild rice and other aquatic plants; an immense aquarium, constructed in a cave, so that deep water fishes can be observed through glass openings in the rock many feet below the surface, that the exhibition now attracting so much attention at the World's Fair in Paris; running brook, pond, waterfall, fish stairways, to show salmon and trout ascending streams, etc. There will be fish of all sizes and ages shown, together with the apparatus of the fish hatcheries. The fish will be shown as nearly as possible in their natural haunts, with their natural food and habits of life. Competent experts with plenty of money will labor to make the exhibition a most interesting one. The exposition managers provide ample ground and abundance of water. A unique system of electric and colored lights will add to the effect and beauty of the show. The following fish will certainly be shown, and as many more as can be procured in season: Herring, brook trout, siscowet, small-mouthed bass, large-mouthed bass, rainbow or mountain trout, German brown trout, wall-eyed pike, grayling, pike, salmon, trout, perch, German carp, muskallunge, whitefish, sturgeon, gar pike, silver eels, catfish, rock bass, blue gills, suckers, red-horn, sunfish, etc.

To thousands of people this will be the most novel exhibition they have ever seen. Salmon will be shown in the act of leaping up artificial waterfalls.

THE STRANGE SECRETS OF THE WATERS

and their inhabitants will be laid bare to the spectators. Colored lights will produce rare and beautiful effects in the water. The methods of artificial hatching will be explained. The beauty and elegance of many of these live gems fish will be pictures that will long live in the memory. The exhibition will also be of great value to teaching people who care to learn how to propagate fish, and in giving valuable pointers to fishermen and fish culturists from other states, and to naturalists, especially as to the intelligence of fishes, and their capability of being tamed and made pets of. To the women and children, particularly, will this novel exhibition be a delight, long to be remembered with pleasure. And many a man will learn the "o him strange lesson that the pool or stream on his farm can be made to yield a larger cash income per acre, than the richest land he ever cultivated, if he will only make good use of the opportunities that the secrets of nature have wrested from her storehouse of valuable secrets. Perhaps some day in the future, counties and states will compete with each other at fairs, in the exhibition of improved breeds of fish, as they now do in exhibitions of improved cattle, sheep and swine.

A Century of Progress.

Only a century ago charcoal iron was produced to the extent of about 20,000 tons yearly; twenty years later the product was but 53,000 tons. Even Great Britain in 1788 produced only 68,300 tons—not so much as some furnaces in the United States now turn out yearly. The manufacture of steel was just beginning in the States; twenty years later only 917 tons were produced in the country. The coarsest pig iron then cost about as much as steel rails do now. Last year the American product of pig iron was 9,480,739 tons, and the highest price of best foundry pig was $21 a ton. The output of steel rails was in round numbers 1,350,000, and the best price $31.50. A single American railway now buys more iron than both Great Britain and the United States made a century ago. There were neither railways, iron bridges nor buildings; no petroleum pipes, for there was no petroleum; no gas pipes, for there was no gas lighting even in Europe until later.

Washington lived in an age of darkness; instead of the electric light the people had candles costing about two cents apiece. In all the departments and applications of chemistry the century has simply created a new world. American pressed glass, which has completely revolutionized the supply of table and house ware, is an invention of the last sixty years. Farming in Washington's day knew nothing of machinery; even the first iron plow, patented in 1797, was a failure, for the Jersey Jersualem farmers thought it poisoned the soil. Mowers, reapers and harvesters began to be invented about the same time, and even the ordinary implements were such as it would not now be thought possible to use. The steamboat was practically unknown, and the railway entirely until forty years later the cost of transportation by wagon confined the area of possible production with profit, as to most crops, to the margin of navigable waters. In fact, a new world has been created in this century.—London Iron.

Hog and Hominy.

There are but few subjects to which we warm more kindly than hog and hominy. It once had its habitat in this section; in fact it is almost cosmopolitan, it can exist in every clime, but the true home of hog and hominy is in this delightful region. Before the war, in those good old days when peace and plenty cheered the laboring swain in this (not favored clime, the hog received distinguished attention.

The glorious reports of the maturing large corn crop of this section confirms up pictures that are colored by the recollection of the past. There was a time when southwest Georgia was noted for being the greatest provision country of the south. It was the Egypt of the south during the dark days of the war between the states.

Its granaries were as full as the cemented wheat bins of Egypt in Joseph's time, and meat and corn were hauled from here in long trains that daily went to supply the needs of the army of the Potomac and the western army. Notwithstanding the drain upon our resources, they were not exhausted, but the cessation of hostilities found us with corn and porkers in great abundance. Plantations not comprising more than 500 acres killed, after the war, as many as 400 hogs.

Under the altered condition of things our plantters did not believe it possible to raise their own meat, and wholly neglected one of the best industries we had, and the consequence has been that we have had our smoke house in the west ever since and we make a large annual contribution to the property of the west. Fully 200 cars of western meat are annually received in Albany and consumed within the limits of its territory. That amounts to the enormous tax of $200,000.—Albany (Ga.) News and Advertiser.

Varzin.

The estate of Varzin, which formerly belonged to Count Blumenthal, is the finest in Pomerania. Prince Bismarck owns only half of the original Blumenthal property, the other half having been purchased by the Prince of Hohenollern-Sigmaringen.

The schloss of Varzin is a large plain house of two stories, with a courtyard and two projecting wings, in which are the kitchen and offices. The principal rooms look out on a vast lawn, and on this side of the lawn there is a wide veranda. The estate extends to 22,000 acres, of which 15,000 are covered with some of the finest forest in Germany, principally oak and beech. The prince has a home farm of 400 acres, and the remainder of the property is let in large farms, averaging 700 acres. All the woods are in hand, and Prince Bismarck has several large mills on the River Wipper, which runs through the estate. He has greatly improved and developed this property, and his forests furnish most of the wooden pavements in the streets of Berlin. The country all around Varzin is very picturesque, and there are beautiful walks and drives through the woods for many miles in every direction. The estate was given to Prince Bismarck by the late Emperor William in 1866.—London World.

Extensive Buddhist Temples.

The Buddhists in Burmah do not consider the question of expense in beautifying their temples. Here is the description of the new vane of a pagoda at Rangoon: "The vane is about three feet by one and a half feet broad and thickly crusted with precious stones and lovely fans of the red Burmese gold. One ruby alone is worth 2,000 rupees, and there are several hundred rubies alone on this beautiful thing. On the tip of the iron rod on which works the vane is a richly carved and perforated solid gold ornament called the Bemboo. It is somewhat egg-shaped and about a foot in height, tipped by an enormous diamond encircled by many smaller ones crusted on like barnacles. All over the exquisite oval object are similar clumps of diamonds, no other stone being used for this part."—London Figaro.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to lie but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—E. T. Schmitzer, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

BLOWN UP BY A GASOLINE STILL.

The Night Engineer Burned to Death—Injury to Persons and Property.

A large gasoline still belonging to A. D. Miller & Sons' oil refinery at Allegheny City, Pa., exploded. The entire refinery was destroyed by the fire that followed. Perry Hawk, an engineer who slept in a house close by the still at the time of the explosion and was probably instantly burned. Thomas McGuire, the night engineer, was buried in the ruins and his body was recovered later burned to a crisp. The employes in the house were caught in flames within a moment after the explosion, shutting off every possibility of escape. Five valuable horses were burned to death. The establishment contained four large wood stills, 30,000 barrels of crude and 1,500 barrels of refined oil. It was a brick building, 225 by 60 feet. The residence of D. Osborn was burned and other adjoining property was damaged. The loss is about $100,000, partly insured.

THREE TRAINS IN A SMASH-UP.

Two Freights and a Passenger Badly Damaged on the Erie.

A Lehigh Valley freight train was backing into a switch at Big Flats, N. Y., when the Erie express with the right of way crashed into the caboose, burned through it and two other cars, the whole mass of wreckage topping over and rolling down the embankment. Andrew Wallace, a passenger, was buried under the wreck and scalded, besides sustaining other injuries, from which he will die. Charles Himball's arm was broken. GOOD FOR THE ORCHARDMEN.

A Remedy Discovered for Pear-Leaf Blight and Apple Mildew.

Prof. T. D. Gardner, chief of the section of vegetable pathology, Department of Agriculture, has recently succeeded as the result of practical experiments in producing a remedy for the disease called pear-leaf blight and apple mildew, which annually causes great destruction to these trees. As a result of practical experiments he feels justified in recommending it to the farmers and fruit-growers as both efficacious and economical. The remedy consists of the application of a fungicide, with an application by wires 50,000 plants were sprayed in a day and a half at a cost, not including labor, of $4.75 for each application, five being required to secure good results.

THE MONEY ALL USED.

Fears of an Epidemic at Johnstown, Pa.—Unless Relief Comes.

The $30,000 appropriated to clean streets and cellars of Johnstown, Pa., has been exhausted and unless there is more money forthcoming the work will have to be suspended. Dr. Leo of the State Board of Health says there is great danger of a serious epidemic if the vigilance which the Board of Health has been exercising in keeping the place in a good sanitary condition is abated. An extra session of the legislature now seems to be the only available means of securing the necessary funds to prosecute the work. Dr. Loe is of the opinion that there are hundreds of bodies still buried in the cellars of houses.

THE TRADE OUTLOOK.

Prospects Flattering for a Good Fall Business.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

In all directions business prospects continue encouraging, and the changes during the past week have been on the right side. Experts increase and a speculative rise in breadstuffs has been checked. Interior cities report increase in the volume of trade, and wholesale business continues amply supplied, though orders are gradually being enlarged. Industrial features appear to be fully as good, nothing so last week, with clearer evidence of improvement in iron. Further crop news sustains favorable advices and strengthens the prevailing impression that the August report will be the most cheerful of any in recent seasons. The prospect of small advance in some products the general range of prices has not materially changed, and railroad earnings continue good, though all controversies have not as yet been adjusted. The Western roads report fewer interior cities all agree that the crop prospects are excellent, and that the banks are not yet amply supplied with funds, while the demand for money is slowly increasing and indicates a little more anything. At most points West in gold, dealers seeking it, and at Kansas City it is quoted at a premium of 25 per cent. Nevertheless, working much below their full capacity. But there are some signs of improvement in the clothing trade. We are advanced 5 cents, reacted, and closed only ½ cent higher than last week, sales of cotton have been large, and with only a small advance, only retaining the rise of 8c. Pork products are generally lower and cotton unchanged. An advance in some styles of cotton goods is by many expected, and the spinners discussion is the notable trade in dry goods, but prices are still dull. The iron and steel trade continues quite good. The business failures occurring throughout the country during the seven days included in the report number for the United States 161, and for Canada 18, in all 179, as compared with 201 in the preceding seven days. For the corresponding week last year the figures were 219, and 19, in all 238 in the United States and 32 in Canada.

THE GREEN DIAMOND

NEWS AND GOSSIP ANENT THE NATIONAL GAME.

Boston Again Leading in the Fight for the League Pennant. Miscellaneous Gossip About Players.

(BRICKSON CORRESPONDENT.)

Boston has again braced up and is now playing good ball. Chicago, which has recovered its cunning, Rochburn is once more in trim, and it looks now as if their chances of winning the pennant are A 1. They are again in the lead, with New York a real second, the other six clubs trailing along in about the same relative standing in which they have occupied for the last three or four weeks. Chicago, strengthened by the engagement of Williamson, a short field, has been playing a strong, steady game during the past week, gaining three straight from Washington. A continuance of this style of play will land them near the top at the close of the season. President Spalding and Captain Anson have not yet despaired of bringing the flag to Chicago, and stranger things than this have happened. To an impartial observer, however, it looks as if the fight was between New York and Boston for first place. There is not a season for the New York team who does not believe the club will win the championship. Like Furlong, of St. Louis, and Shoff Owen Thomason of Clay County, Missouri, where the robbery occurred. The officers will make public the evidence they claim to have against the man, but they say that they are certain that they have captured the desperadoes. Howe Fulton is a roustabout on a river steamer and Jim Fulton is a driver of an ice-wagon in Randolph, Mo.

TO OPEN RED LAKE RESERVATION.

Probability That 3,000,000 Acres of Good Land Will Soon Be Open.

The outlook for the opening of the great Red Lake reservation in Minnesota is better. Up to the 17th inst. no signatures had been obtained and the Indians were plotting a massacre. The ringleader of the opposition was arrested and a large number of the Indians practically surrendered. Commissioner Hiee explained at a council that the whites only wanted to teach peaceful methods and the Leech Lake reed men began signing. The commissioners assert that they will have sufficient signatures in another week to secure the opening of the reservation of 3,000,000 acres.

It is claimed that a fast-mail train over the Vandalia was robbed at Terre Haute, while the mail clerks had their backs turned at supper, of one pouch containing registered letters containing about $10,000. Diligent inquiry results in a semi-confirmation of the rumor, it being admitted that a pouch was missing, but that it has afterward been recovered. It is not known in what condition the pouch was when found, as the postal authorities are very reticent about the matter.

The opinion reconciles the ruling of the Department which prevailed throughout all administrations since dating the issuance of rule No. 135 by Gen. Black.

Eloped with a Priest.

The wife of Mike McDonald, the millionaire sporting man and ex-gambler, of Chicago, has eloped with a Catholic priest.

ELOPED WITH A PRIEST.

MIKE McDONALD'S UNFAITHFUL WIFE CAUSES A SENSATION.

Father Joseph Moquet, of Notre Dame Church, Her Paramour—Masquerading in the Garb of a Nun. She Carries on a Liaison for Two Years.

(Chicago special.)

What has for many days past been neighborhood gossip in the aristocratic residence district of Ashland Boulevard and Ogden avenue, has crystallized into a fact, and it became known to the outside world, that Mrs. M. McDonald, wife of the well-known politician and gambler, has left her home.

It is supposed that she is by this time in Canada, and that she will not be seen or heard of again here is doubtful.

This is not her first escapade of the kind, she having in 1885 decamped to Canada with her "baby" Arlington, disguised as a nun. At that time the sensation caused by the abandonment of the residents of the elegant mansion on Ogden avenue, by McDonald, however, unexplained, but this time the sensation of two years when his affairs were not so great as now, and so he forgave his erring partner, brought her home, and strove to "live down" the scandal. It is surprising how long a city will stand down on their knees when "the wronged husband clinches his fists and calls name to the world."

Mike came to Chicago the first time in a very poor way, last July. My wife, who had been a country girl, married and thought she had met a poor priest at the church, fell in love with him, and then came to supper. Why, of course, I replied, "living with a husband who is away from home is what they are hungry." She brought the dirty priest home and I treated him to the best pleasant looking object. He had no shoes on and his clothes were ragged as those of a scarecrow. I said to her "Good God, woman, what is the matter with you? Why don't you get him a pair of shoes?" She replied, "Why, he has no money." I said, "Why don't you give him some of my finest silk handkerchiefs?"

"This thieving, rascally fellow so worked on her that she would do anything in the world for him. He got her to do what he wanted to do. He got her to pawn her watch from my pockets at night, and in various ways made of our home a place for the priest to come and fleece—hog—and would eat five meals a day and carry away the rest in his pockets. He came day after day and was made welcome to the best we had.

"They had their places of meeting at the Sherman House. Finally, the priest left the Sherman House—fine, going to Chicago—and I found out that he was living in a very poor house. Three days after the opement and was then dressed in a suit of clothes that I had bought for him, and wearing a hood and a nun's dress, and was in a hack.

"This scoundrel, I am convinced, planned to have me arrested, and I was, at the suit of her in some manner. He circulated a story that I had shot at him. This, he is great white before there would be a funeral. I was in my office when I heard of it. I had a boy who knew Mayor Harrison. He said he was diseased, and was liable to die at any moment. I went to the Mayor, told these stories, and I am positive he would have sent me to another one. He either would not or did not have the nerve to do the action.

"I can conceive no reason for my wife's strange infatuation. I love my home and children and wife, and did everything I could to make her happy and happy. My life was never sinned for money; she had five times the expended on her since. Three weeks before she finally left me I was in Washington, and I left her with the boy and gave her money to pack some changes in her father's grave. I gave her $150 for that purpose and the day she went away for the last time I gave her $100 for her trip expenses and she took care this money, or the greater part of it, to her priest-lover.

"Twice to some old saying reflecting on an empty jug, but it is better empty than when filled with benzine.

QUAY'S DIRTY METHODS.

THE DEMOCRATIC SOCIETIES AND THEIR WORK.

The Pennsylvania Ensoiler Hopes to Extend His Corrupt Methods to the New States—A New Force Coming to the Service of the Democratic Party.

(Washington letter to New York Globe.)

The dullness of this town is a little relieved by the gossip about the organization of the next House and the elections in the new States. The threat of a combination of Southern Republican members to compel terms on the election of Speaker, and so to bring Harrison to his senses, produced a genuine fright among the faithful. The power of the sculdaggery to do this very thing is so palpable that the members of it make the Republican leaders quake in their shoes. But such, in this party of great moral ideas, is the supreme reliance upon the virtue of patronage and plunder, that they are specially reassured. But the fear of disaster in the new States is a different matter. The Federal offices are so few and so ill-paid that administrative patronage will count for little there. And the interests of the people are so plainly on the side of tariff reform that Mr. Harrison, Mr. Quay, Mr. Dudley and all the excellent gentlemen who engineered the last election by the process now known as Blackmailing, are very painfully exercised over the possibility of a catastrophe. They have come to the conclusion that the people out there must be dealt with by the last resource of politicians, bribery being interpreted, means boodle.

Accordingly, the money left over from the purchase of the Presidency and such other sums as can be raised, will be applied to the work of bribery. The victory of last fall by preventing the lapse of the new States to the Democracy, made it possible that the specific acts on which there has occurred so much comment took place in the month of May, when it was too late to increase making specches; therefore he was not the only Democrat who voted that day. As the net in the first place was cast in a large number, it became necessary to secure the votes of some of the Democrats, who, in the ordinary course, would not have voted for the bill in the old States of New York and Indiana. Mr. Mckinley, who engineered the job, knows a trust from a bull-head when he sees it, has ordered the matter cast in deeper waters, and it is said by those who have made knowledge of affairs in the Pension Bureau that the artful Secretary is very liable to catch a bull trust that is when the time of charging the same persons that have been purchased from time to time has crossed the threshold of the Pension Bureau are close at his heels, and to their suggestions is credited the idea of a force in the part of Secretary Noble. They have discovered that it is possible thing to oust Tanner.

NOW FOR THE APPOINTMENT.

The way Tanner got his appointment may not prove uninteresting at this time. While on his way westward a short time subsequent to the inauguration he called on Secretary Noble, he stopped at Indianapolis for the purpose of paying his respects to Mr. Harrison. In the course of his stay he made a speech that caught the audiences fancy, as he expressed it, that the latter indicated Tanner to cancel his engagement and stand for a time. The speech, it is said, was given him by Mr. Harrison that if he was elected he would make a good Commissioner of Pensions. When Tanner was absent from Washington, the latter fired his promise was voluntarily renewed on the part of Secretary Noble, and at a time subsequent to the inauguration Tanner came to Washington and Secretary Noble called on President Arthur and asked that he deliver the goods. Tanner was accordingly called in to consignor, the Mexican Government takes charge of Arthur's interests, and he (Arthur) but is taken themselves, except in as case of Mr. Harrison, who, in the conduct of affairs, either of purchase, or of the transfer, wholly by the Mexicans, and the Mexicans are to or own orders and co-times. The very Mexicans are to be responsible for nothing of Mexican affairs, and, in fact, they are not allowed to know what and where they approach. The more civilized Mexicans are, the more they are to be mandat s as well, as a general thing, that the Mexicans are not allowed to know anything about the transaction, and, if there is any object is a maintenance of the Mexicans, it is to keep the Mexicans ports of the mountains even war against, and have even had any Mexican Government yes or no, and conclude their terms called on to be the Mexicans on their own basis. I was informed by Mr. Gomez, a gentleman who speaks both Spanish and Eg lish, one as interp

The necessity for this work is apparent when it is known that 400,000, or two out of every five "school age" of our youth are outside our Sunday schools. The officers of the evening were J. M. Harris, chairman and A. E. Martin secretary. Officers were elected preparatory to forming a county association as follows: President, Rev. William H. Norton of Boyne City; vice president, Rev. W. H. Democrat's for September.

"A YACHTING PARTY," a beautifully excited water-color, is the fitting Frontispiece for Demorest's Monthly Magazine for September. This is followed by a handsomely illustrated article on Bar Harbor, which almost makes us feel the cool breezes of that delightful summer resort. From the extreme west we are carried to the extreme east and are treated to a very amusing account (to which the illustrations greatly add) of how two women took up a quarter section of land in Dakota, and successfully cultivated it. We then go on "A Voyage Through Space" to the sun, and in an extremely interesting way, that even a child can understand, are told all about the spots that appear on the face of the "god of day." Jenny Jane tells us, in the department for "Our Girls," when girls should marry, and the boys are not forgotten, for there is given for them a seasonable article (profusely illustrated) on "Swimming and Diving." "School Outfits," "The Chemistry of Bread-Making," and "The Complexion: How to Preserve It," are some of the other interesting articles, and, to top off with, is a fine selection of very interesting stories, all suitable to the times and for the season. This comprehensive Magazine is published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th Street. New York.

CATARRH.—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 1905:2

JOSEPHUS SAVED OUR SCALPS.

A Wild West Coal on the Warpath—Some of his Pranks.

"Josephus" was a character. Now, although Josephus was a character, the innocence of his expression and the subdued manner in which he walked about among the tents and cabins of "Hard Pan Bottom" continually got him into trouble, as well as those temporarily associated with him. Hard Pan Bottom was a rough mining camp in the Black Hills, and the companions of Josephus, were for the most part a rather of the lawless, hard looking and "rocky." How Josephus received his name no one in camp knew; it was said to have "come natural." He had a long grayish beard, exceedingly prominent ears and great curved horns. In fact, Josephus was a well developed Rocky Mountain goat.

The "boys" all liked Josephus, that is, after they had made his acquaintance and introduced their friends. This latter operation was always productive of much mirth to the "mutual friend," and consisted in enticing some new comer to meet "The Judge." The meeting usually took place in front of "Buckeye" Smith's "piney" shop. Josephus entered into the spirit of the affair with great gusto, and never failed to make a hit with the public. The operation consisted in exporting the victim to "Buckeye's" shanty and engaging him in conversation, while the "Judge," as he was nicknamed, was sent for. During the conversational process a pin from the flannel was pinned to the waistband of the "new boy."

One or two shrill whistles generally brought Josephus on the double quick, and it was without in the best of standing his pace that he made a bee line for the red rag, and the consequence was that the new acquaintance invariably measured his length on the ground, and as he scrambled upon his hands and knees, was again laid low; and so it continued until the pin was removed or Josephus asked to have a drink. During the ceremony of introduction, cries of "Here's the judge," "Mr. Jones, Mr. Josephus!" "Shake hands with him, pard!" "He is a powful, stranger!" and similar remarks, accompanied by shouts of laughter were handled about by the delighted spectators, while the yells and pistol shots helped to bring the surprised stranger to a demoralized condition of abject fear. He then stood and gazed in crowd.

The beard of Josephus was a continual source of annoyance to him, as the miners enjoyed pulling it to provoke its owner to fight.

During the early morning, before daylight, in the camp of "Yellow Mike," the boys first realized the value of Josephus. A party had all the night been devoting their energies to the noble game of poker and to discussing the Indian outbreak, when suddenly, just outside, there was a dull thud, a blood curdling yell, another thud, another shriek and through the side of the tent, in all the hideousness of his war paint, tumbled a full fledged Indian brave, while close behind him was Josephus. All hands sprang to their feet, revolvers were drawn, the Indian was killed and the camp aroused, just in time, for already were the war whoops sounding and rifles crackling. It was only after three hours of hard fighting that the attack was repulsed, when the surprise having failed the savages drew off. As for Josephus, he received the rank of colonel, although more often spoken of as "The Spy Killer." But Josephus did not live to enjoy his honors. Unlimited "red eye" whisky was too much for his constitution and he died fighting imaginary Indians. The entire camp attended the funeral, which was pronounced to be the most high toned on record in the county.—New York Tribune.

How to Sell Goods.

"How to sell goods?" repeated a New York merchant after a Sunday reverie. "It depends upon the man. That is the whole secret. Like the old parody on Victor Hugo, 'If you want to be a good salesman, you must educate your grandmother.' A good salesman is born, not made. In the first place you must be able to size up your prospective customer. If you tell a racy story to a church deacon, and if you offer a prohibitionist candidate for justice a drink out of your private bottle, or if you try to get the village freethinker to direct you to prayer meeting, you will make an exquisite mistake. You must, like St. Paul, be all things to all men, and, more than that, the right things to the right men. You can't sell two men in the same way. You must attack each man differently. You must catch a man when he is not busy and when he is not tired. When you do go for a man, go for him horse, foot and dragoon. Don't give him a chance to get away from you, but hold on to him until you land him. You must be prepared for every possible reception, and for every possible and impossible objection, and suddenly you find you have sold a big bill, and you have to go over the thing slowly afterward to find out how you did it."

Athletic Sports Growing in Popularity.

Baseball, horse racing, yachting, rowing, sparring, and a number of other manly diversions divide the attention of the whole people, but few failing to have their sympathies enlisted in one or the other of these pastimes. A proper degree of attention paid to all sorts of manly sports, and to athletics especially, will do much to promote health and contentment among the people, and will moreover serve to gradually modify one of the most pronounced and not particularly admirable traits in the American character, namely, a too absorbing application to strictly commercial matters. This all absorbing rush after gain has kept in abeyance many of the more attractive traits of the American character, hence it is a matter for congratulation that there is a growing tendency towards giving more time to healthful amusement and manly exercise, as indicative of a healthful change of habits.—New Orleans Picayune.

EXAMINED BY THE DOCTOR.

Ordeal of Those Who Wish to Get Their Lives Insured.

To get one's life insured it is first necessary to pass an examination by a physician appointed by the company one wishes to enter. This examination, although a very simple process, has no charms for most people. Nevertheless, it costs nothing, and enables the applicant to know in just what condition heart, lungs and other organs are.

Having first expressed to the agent a desire for a policy, you fill out your application, stating to whom the money shall go if you should die, also your age, occupation, birthplace, family history from a medical standpoint, and whether or no you ever have been rejected by any other company.

Next step: The examining physician drops in and writes your answers to a string of questions involving the medical history of your family for generations and your own medical history. You will be asked if you have had any of the 999 ills that flesh is heir to, the nature of your illness, its duration, the name of your attending physician, and the present effect, if any, of the disease on your system.

Next step: The physician takes out his stethoscope, and you take off your coat and vest. The stethoscope having been adjusted, the M. D. hearkens to the pulse like waves that murmur through the hidden caves of your heart. Diastole and systole, auricular and ventricular conditions are carefully noted, and if some tiny valve, through indolence or inability, does not open and shut with clockwork precision, the stethoscope gives you notice that the M. D., who knows always his anxiety for your future. If he is a doctor of the old school, or a doctor gifted with a nice discriminating sense of hearing, he detects the weakness of your cardiac apparatus by placing his ear against your breast, and by listening the old fashioned way. Sometimes when you breathe whether your lungs are clear as a whistle or some one of the tiny bronchi is slightly affected with incipient tuberole.

Next step: Your medical examiner extricates a tape measure from his hip pocket, and, spanning your chest with it, asks you to expand your chest, his object being to find out your capacity for breathing and the capacity of your chest expansion. Over the abdomen the tape is next extended, and the circumference of that region noted. Tape measure put away, he notes whether your pulse is normal or otherwise. Your height and weight are noted down. Then he takes precautions to learn the condition of your kidneys, and the examination is over.

Do you breathe easier? Oh, no; not yet. Your name is forwarded his report to the company and you have heard the glad tidings that you are O. K., and may take out a policy. Of course if your application is rejected you do not breathe quite so easily.—Exchange.

Help Yourself.

Fight your own battles. Hoe your own row. Ask no favors from any one, and you'll succeed a thousand times better than one who is always beseeching some one's influence and patronage. No one will ever help you as you can help yourself, because no one will be so heartily interested in your success. The people will be such a long one, perhaps; but carving your own way up the mountain you can make each one lead to another, and stand the while you chop off another out. Men who have made fortunes are not those who have had five "red eye" whisky was to start with, but boys who have started fair with a well earned dollar or two.

We make our fame have never been thrust into popularity by puffs lagged or paid for. It is the herald spirit. They have contretched their own hands and touched the public heart. Men who win love do their work so quietly and so unpretentiously as to fail so signally as one who induced his affectionate grandmother to speak a good word for him, when she was work for fame, for love, for money, or for anything else, would be your hands and heart and brain. Say "I will," and some day you will conquer. Never let any man have it to say, "I have dragged you up." You may, perhaps accumulate more of land than none at all.—Yorkville (S. C.) Enquirer.

Couldn't Hurt It.

That poem you published this morning was rather clever, Mr. Clugston," remarked the editor, "though in the critical reader it might have seemed a little incoherent and disconnected."

"That poem," replied the editor of The Doodleville Yelper, fishing a fly out of his paste pot, "was a conundrum. After we had the forms made up we discovered it was an acrostic conveying the intimation that 'Clugston is a darned chump.' We had no room for any such stuff, and thought to take the place of that poem, so I told the foreman to change the order of the verses and mix up the lines so that the first letters would not spell anything, and go to press. It spoiled the thing for an acrostic," continued Mr. Clugston, with a heavy sigh, as relative of the burden that oppresses the mind of a man charged with the seven-year-old thoroughbred Holstein bull.

Milkman and Prices.

A generation ago—some thirty odd years—when I was a freshman in Burlington college, I used to see on my visits to Trenton a grist of queer stories about Prince Morul, who once drove a milk wagon in that town, and was refused in marriage by a score of Trenton belles, because he was suspected that the seedy young farmer milkman would ever be restored as a prince of the empire, and the people from whom he had borrowed money never dreamed of being repaid. Times are changed, and perhaps some impoverished old women still survive at Trenton who now wish they had married the milkman, whose son, Prince Morul, is now thought to be a brilliant catch.—Philadelphia Record.

Book Titles Formerly and Now.

Brevity nowadays seems to be necessary for a good title for a book, and herein lies one striking difference between modern one syllable titles and those of a couple of hundred years ago. Let a few examples serve. Cromwell: "A Reaping Hook well prospered for a harvest." Some of the coming Crop, or Business Man's Best Friend." Cowley, carefully conserved for the Chickens of the Church, the Sparrows of the Spirit, and the sweet Swallows of a Martyrdom." A Pair of Bellows to blow off the Dust cast upon John Fry." "High Heeled Shoes for Dwarfs in Holiness." "The Shop of the Spiritual Apothecary." In 1683 the Bible, "Hase et Hic, or, the Feminine Gender more worthy than the Masculine, being a Indication of that ingenious and innocent tax from the biting Serpents wherewith they are daily aspersed by the Virulent Tongues and Pens of Malevolent Men;" and in 1740, "A Hilatory of Hilchum Cantum; or, a Merry Dialogue between Apollo, Foolish Harry, Silly Billy, a Griffin, a Printer, a Spider Killer, a Jackass, and the Serenous Guna of Lanigsac."—Prince's Register.

Not That Way.

The Good Man (sadly)—Ah, my son, you have been to the circus; it pains me greatly to think that one so young should have crossed the threshold of iniquity. The Bad Small Boy—I didn't go across the threshold; I crawed in under the tent.—Munsey's Weekly.

Increased Facilities.

Notwithstanding that the Scott perfecting web press used by the Detroit Journal, has capacity to print and fold 24 page newspapers at the rate of 20,000 per hour, additional facilities have been found necessary, and another press is being added to our equipment. On September 1st, 1889, we began to use both presses simultaneously with duplicate stereotype plates. The Sunday Journal has also put up in a new engine of three times the power of the one previously employed.

Is Consumption Incurable.

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "Was down with abscess of lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an incurable consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the farm as my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jacob Spellbrant, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by the doctors. Are now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 5

STRICKEN WITH DIPHTHERIA.

Clarence Sherwood a Victim of this Terrible Disease.

This community was startled by the announcement on Monday morning that Clarence Sherwood had died with diphtheria. Very few had known that he was sick,—in fact we understand that he was ill but a few days, and the disease was not pronounced diphtheria until Saturday. The funeral service occurred Monday afternoon.

Clarence was a bright lad, about fourteen years old, and had hosts of friends. His death is a terrible affliction to the parents and relatives.

Mrs. Sherwood and little daughter Lilah are suffering with canker sore throat, but the attending physician expresses confidence of their recovery.

It is the almost universal belief that the disease originated in the decaying timbers in the cellar and foundation of the house in which the stricken family resided.

The board of health should have the premises examined, and if necessary, notify the owner to have the house fixed up, the old rubbish cleaned away, the premises thoroughly disinfected, and a new foundation built.

If our people use every possible sanitary precaution, the disease may be prevented from spreading. By all means keep small children as much as possible away from any case of sore throat which may develop within the next few weeks.

Restriction of Diphtheria.

Doctors disagree on the question whether diphtheria is a contagious disease, but the state board of health says that it is, and publishes laws to restrict its spreading in such cases. The pamphlet also contains instructions for disinfecting sickrooms and surrounding premises during and following every case of the disease. Persons interested should apply to the health officer for a copy, or they can be had by application to the secretary of the state board of health, at Lansing. Among the instructions are the following of vital importance to the community at large:

Every person known to be sick with diphtheria should be promptly and effectually isolated from the house, no more persons than are actually necessary should have charge of or visit the patient, and they should be restricted in their intercourse with other persons.

Plain and distinct notices should be placed upon the premises or house and no child should be allowed to enter.

Every case of diphtheria should at once be reported to the health officer, or to the local board of health, as the law requires, diphtheria being plainly a disease "dangerous to the public health," within the meaning of the law.

Sections 1675 and 1676 of Howell's Statutes provide that "Boards of health, or health officers, may make such rules, regulations, and orders as they shall deem necessary for the safety of the public health, and the health officer is required under penalties to give public notice of the infected house, by placard or otherwise, and to use every possible care to prevent the spread of the disease.

Railroad News.

A. D. Cruickshank returned last Saturday, and brought the good news that the Charlevoix branch of the railroad is satisfactorily settled, and work will be resumed.

On Sunday night the Lawrence brought a large quantity of scrapers, grubbers, teams, men, etc., for use along the line.

Every movement confirms the assertion that the road is to be completed as soon as possible.

Reading the Scriptures from a Law Book.

The Rev. James Buckley, editor of The Christian Advocate, has a paragraph of a remarkable memory. To this he owes much of his success as a preacher and director, in the conventions of ecclesiastical bodies of the Methodist church. The story is well known all over this country for his readiness for quoting precedent and law apropos to the subject under discussion. Mr. Buckley relates an incident in his experience in which this faculty came into play to good purpose. He was called to officiate at a funeral, and when the mourners and friends had all assembled a large book was handed to him from which he read the appropriate scriptural lesson. He opened the book at the place, and was surprised to see that it contained the laws of the state of Connecticut. Without hesitation, however, and to his least embarrassment he began leaping from the book until he had read about that portion of the Connecticut laws where the golden bowl, the pitcher broken at the fountain, and similar prophetic passages are recorded from the Bible. Handing the open book back he began to read the chapter from memory. He cleverly was this done that not one person present suspected the jerky verbiage of the Nutmeg state was being translated into such fervid, impassioned eloquence of Solomon.—New York Sun.

Charlevoix County Fair.

The fall fair of this county for will be held this year as usual at East Jordan, Sept. 11, 12, and 13, and is open to competition to Charlevoix and adjoining counties. The premium lists are now ready for distribution; a number of copies have been sent to this office, and our readers who call can be supplied as long as they last. The premium list is very liberal, and is arranged with a view of bringing out the largest possible exhibit in all departments. The grounds have been greatly improved, and are now among the finest equipped fair grounds in northern Michigan. A new floor has been laid in floral hall, and new box stalls for horses, additional cattle stalls, with covered pens for sheep and swine, are among the added conveniences for the exhibition of 1889. The board of directors are making every effort, which, with the assured assistance of the many exhibitors, will secure an exposition of the products of northern Michigan never equaled, while the present prospect of a large excursion of homeseekers and prospectors from the southern part of the state at the time of the fair, gives the people of northern Michigan a better opportunity to display the product of this country ever before offered. The placing of the dates earlier in the month this year will tend to get better weather. The usual freight and passenger rates have been secured, and all boats touching at East Jordan, exhibits will be carried free, while passengers will travel at excursion rates. The show of live stock promises to be enormous, and that all may be accommodated with convenient quarters, it is desirable that entries be made by mail the week previous to the opening of the fair, so that the management can increase the capacity. This can easily be done by writing the secretary, James H. Stone, at East Jordan. We need not remind our readers that the county fair is an institution of the people, the benefits derived from the annual gathering are almost innumerable. Every per son who attends the fair and pays the admission fee, contributes toward maintaining important industrial and agricultural work, to say nothing of the educational work and influence of the work itself, a consideration which alone should prompt every body to give it a hearty support. The fair is a grand exposition of industrial art and science, and is well worth the comparatively small sum it costs to see it. Old and young of both sexes can here learn lessons which they cannot reach elsewhere. A day's study of the best specimens of art for the decoration of the home, of the various kinds of grain, vegetables and live stock, the vast show of agricultural and industrial implements and other devices for lessening labor and cost of production, will give invaluable ideas and suggestions to the attentive visitor, who will return home with broader ideas, quickened apprehension, and better fitted for the more successful management of affairs. Of interest to the state or district fair takes the lead in extent and variety and general usefulness, but the county fair has its own particular field. The county fair generally can increase its usefulness greatly by placing dates of exhibition ahead of the state or district fair, by retaining the finest exhibits of the product of the county for exhibition there. We believe in fairs, and desire to see them all successful and prosperous, and exercising as they do a great influence especially in stimulating farmers to better things. As ours is to be an agricultural county we must lend our efforts in that direction, and thus contribute to its welfare and prosperity.

G. A. R. at Milwaukee.

That was a jolly party of old soldiers which took passage on the City of Charlevoix last Saturday morning, at Charlevoix and points on Traverse Bay, to attend the national encampment of the G. A. R. at Milwaukee this week.

There were nearly 60 veterans on board when the steamer left Frankfort Sunday noon, and the word was soon passed around to go below for "hardtack." It afterwards turned out the real object of getting together was to organize a northern Michigan post, so as to be represented in a body in the procession, and the easiest way to keep the boys together at the camp.

A. J. Strond of Horton's Bay was made commander, W. H. Porter, of Northport, vice commander, and Byron Ford, adjutant, quartermaster, etc. The roster included the name of every veteran on board.

The veterans arrived at Milwaukee at 6.00 o'clock Monday morning, and the boys marched from the dock to the encampment in good spirits.

Every street in Milwaukee, and nearly every building, was profusely decorated with flags, G. A. R. emblems, pictures, and red, white and blue bunting. The morning papers contained but little except the details and plans for the entertainment of the old veterans who were to be the guests of the city.

The Milwaukee Sentinel estimated that on Sunday night there were at least 30,000 old soldiers in the city, and Monday night it was thought that during there would be at least 75,000 soldiers and visitors in attendance at the encampment.

SOME FACTS ABOUT EGGS.

Hatching Chickens by the Million in Egypt for American Consumers.

The Egyptians are, however, far in advance of us in the science of raising chickens, and the incubating establishments of the country hatch out eggs by the million every year. At a hatching establishment near the Pyramids the farmers trade fresh eggs for young chicks and the rate is two eggs per chick. Another artificial hatchery turns out 200,000 little chickens every season, and the oven crop of chickens in Egypt amounts, according to figures furnished maybe the consul general, to more than twenty millions of chickens a year.

We have about two hundred million dollars worth of money invested in the fowl industry in the United States, an amount so large that all the money of Jay Gould could not equal it, and still we have to import more than sixteen million dozens of eggs every year. If America would adopt the Egyptian hatching system we could sell eggs instead of buying them, and our farmers might buy little chickens to raise at a price of twenty cents a dozen. More than twenty millions of little chickens are hatched out every year in Egypt, and there is a regular business in chickens just old enough to walk.

The incubatories are rude, one story buildings, made of undried bricks, so arranged that the eggs are laid upon cut straw in rooms in rooms, around the ovens, which are kept fired on during the hatching season. The outside walls are very thick and are built so that they retain the heat, and the only thermometer used is the blood of the boy or man who attends to the fires. By a long practice these men learn just how hot the ovens ought to be, and they replenish the fires as the weather demands. A small amount of fuel is needed, and the temperature of the ovens is about 100 of 96 degs. above zero. The fire is built up for eight or ten days before the eggs are put in, to thoroughly warm the hut, and after this time it does not go out during the season, which is from March until May. The eggs are turned four times a day while hatching. The whole outfit of an establishment which hatches over 200,000 chickens a year does not, I am told, cost more than $25, and one man runs the whole machine, keeping the fires, buying and turning the eggs and selling the chickens. There are in this incubatory twelve compartments, each 70 feet long, 50 feet wide and 18 feet high, and each of these compartments will hold 7,500 eggs at a time, or 90,000 eggs in all. It produced last year more than 250,000 chickens and did the work of more than 90,000 hens.—Cairo (Egypt) Letter.

Winged Portents.

THEIR EYES.

BY LYDIA FLATT RICHARDS.

May's eyes are blue, celestial bright,
They flash with radiant, rapturous light,
So love it and gaze and gaze and gaze!
Like windows to her brilliant mind.

Ted's eyes are brown—a wondrous tint;
They dance and glow and glance and glint;
They are so bright, so full of fun,
And from their fires you wisely turn.

Maud's eyes are gray—dark as shade;
No changing colors from turtle, afraid.
Tranquil and calm, with mirror and ease;
They may be true—yet, still, beware!

Jess' eyes are hazel, full of fire;
They glow with love or flash with ire;
Their light uncertain, warm and cold,
Their secrets are too freely told.

THE CHICKEN THIEF.

A Humorous Sketch.

BY HACKSTONE.

WHEN I was much younger than I am now, and used a different set of thoughts to work with, it seemed to me that the chief food of young manhood was to have a girl or two and a horse and buggy. The other innocent thing a young man needs didn't bother me much, neither did the horse and buggy, but the girls made the trouble.

I can't say that I wanted to marry all the girls I waited on; indeed, the girls' mothers used to give me a warning themselves that I didn't want to marry any of them, and this innocent fact disturbed me, because I used to think a girl's mother ought to be satisfied when she found I was not going to take her daughter away and keep her.

I couldn't understand it, but just as I would begin to get along nicely with a girl, the mother would come on the scene and make all sorts of intimations that I couldn't comprehend. I would smile and laugh, and try in all sorts of ways to make the mother think I thought her smart and funny. But it wouldn't work. It was always only a matter of time when I would go calling and find the mother in the parlor playing "Home, Sweet Home," and the daughter—well, the daughter's whole absorbing thought was to get me alone. Sometimes it was business, sometimes sickness, or out of town, or something which signified absence from home when I thought she ought to be.

When I look back on some of these evenings now they seem very dull, but then they were interesting, because I couldn't quite make the matter out.

The mother would say a few words, then she would thrum a chord of "Home, Sweet Home," then I would say something, and she would say "Yes," then she would say "Excuse me, please."

During the ten minutes of her absence I would work my poor head for all it was worth, and get a set of questions and answers all arranged for me, but when she came back and I set my dialogue in motion, somehow or other what I conceived to be funny would fall flat, and what I thought real smart and serious, she would laugh at, just as if it was funny. Of course I didn't want to be rude and rush right out of the house while everything was in a dead calm, nor did I feel like going when she was laughing at something that wasn't funny. The fact is, it was hard to stay, and there didn't seem to be any proper time to go. When I did get away, I would blame the poor girl for having such an uninteresting mother.

Then I would get another girl—or, rather, try to get another girl's mother. My success would run right along in the same channel of its predecessor, and then the mother would spring the old formula to chief on me, with such variations as the changed circumstances seemed to warrant. I finally got tired of that variety which had such a sameness to it, and made hold one day to tell a mother so. She didn't say it in so many words, but she made me understand that, as I didn't like her style, the next time she came to see me at the place, she would "sic" the dogs on me. The three dogs were not particularly large or vicious, but they had big barks, and when I left the mother still talking and gesticulating, I thought about that, and I made up my mind the bloody rose I had got with the girl's former beau wasn't in vain. I'd just quit the old lady and cultivate the wagon cook and the dogs.

"Now, looker yere, Marser H.," the cook said to me shortly after the fracas with the mother, "if yer wants to cum fo de kitchen to see de young missus, 'cause you ah' de ole missus dun's 'cracky git along, Susan ain't er carin', ku' bein' as how de ole missus done tole us you're mine, wa'n't gwine to be talked about yere, I kin' gwine to tell nobody when you is here, jes' so long you don't bodder Susan, and dat's me. De young missus is in de kitchen wait'in' for you now, an 'you jes' go in while I gits some weed an' watches out for dem niggers what's er prowlin' erbout yere for her hook de chickins."

Now that we have got to the chickens, just leave me in the kitchen with Aunt Susan and the "young missus," while we take a look at the "ole missus," up-stairs.

It is dark up in the hall, but you can see her "laying" for the chicken thief. She's got the two hired men downstairs trained to run out at a signal, and no doubt the old gentleman will exchange his paper for a gun when she gives the word. It's awful lonesome work watching for a chicken thief—he comes when you don't expect him; you hear the chickens cackle (those that he hasn't got), and before you're ready he is off. My lady, though, knew the way of the chicken thief, and she made it her business to pace up and down the hall, peeping out of the front door occasionally, then out of the back door, and then out of a dark room which looked right down on to the trees where the chickens were made to roost, expressly to trap the chicken thief.

You may be sure the old lady had a lonesome job pacing around to her lookouts, and it is not strange that she fell a wondering why the "young missus" took such a sudden interest in cooking and ironing; it is not strange, either, that she "smelt a mouse" the first pop, and sneaked down stairs to see how her daughter looked cooking or ironing.

Well, we won't follow the mother down into the kitchen; just suffice it to say that the visitor had a seat near the kitchen window, convenient to the ground. He's all right, the old lady can't catch him in the kitchen, because there's a line between the door and that window, and on that line is a big sheet. Just never mind him; let's go out and see what the chickens are cackling about.

The whole mother rushed to the back porch at the first cackle, turned out the dogs and hired men, all of which set up such a racket that the last hen on the place fell to squawking. From the porch the mother directed the hunt for the thief, ordering the men in the shrubbery, the dogs somewhere else, until the air was so thick with orders and counter-orders that a regular bedlam was there. When they all got tired of yelling and running about to no purpose they settled down seriously to look for the thief. The dogs would run up to a little bunch of shrubbery and stop. Then they would seem to give up the hunt until ordered on again, when they would go right to that same bush and stop. This attracted the attention of the hired men, and, alas for the fugitive, they looked in there and found a man. The mother was so overwhelmed with joy when she saw the two strong men holding the game she had been after so long that she ordered him bound hands and feet and secured in the bottom of their springless wagon to jail.

When they got the culprit bound hand foot they laid him down on his back in the snow, while they hitched up the team that was to cart him off. The whole family, Aunt Susan and all, looked on from the porch, and when the two strong men tossed him in the wagon like a sack of potatoes, and drove away with him, the household congratulated themselves on being well rid of a troublesome rascal.

At the breakfast table the next morning the chicken-thief was the chief topic, and when breakfast was over the "young missus" slipped into the kitchen to discuss another side of the affair with Aunt Susan.

"You may be sure," said Aunt Susan, "dat dat ere white man done got to de big road 'fore de dogs got out fer de chicken-thief, case he popped out on de widder jes as ole mf-ms came into de door. He had been a-sneakin' 'long away 'fore de kan's got out after de hen squawk. No, honey, you kin jes' bet dey didn't nobody see him."

Just then a boy called with a note. "Ah!" exclaimed the young lady, "here's a note from him telling us all about it," and she hastily tore open the letter and began to read:

MY DEAR MISS—Please send my horse home by the bearer, and oblige, yours respectfully, P. S. maybe not for several days. You all feel like horse down in the lane, where I left him last night before I got the satisfactoriness step on that miserable chicken.

I don't ask you to do a favor for myself, but out of sympathy for my horse, he must be hungry, and I know he would like to be down home, and you know a good bet with his stomach. I can sympathize with him. Yours in jail,

PRETTY LAKE GEORGE.

MANY NATIONALITIES REPRESENTED AMONG HOTEL GUESTS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONGSIDE LAKE GEORGE, N.Y., July 1, 1895.—Several of the resorts to famous watering-places are commonly made to include a sail on Lake George. It is close to Saratoga, it is little farther off from the Adirondacks and the Green Mountains, and for remoteness, Lake White Foundation, its scenery is so far beyond the beautiful that tourists are willing to go a little out of their direct course to sail over its phenomenally clear water and to look at the mountain scenery which surrounds it. There is hardly a place in the country away from a city, where one sees so many natives and foreigners, all holiday the game she had been after so long that she ordered him bound hands and feet and secured in the bottom of their springless wagon to jail.

A TYPICAL GERMAN TOURIST.

look at the mountain scenery which surrounds it. There is hardly a place in the country away from a city, where one sees so many natives and foreigners, all holiday folk, as one sees at Lake George. It seems to setting in your mind, without outside evidence, what economists call a sign-looking man has come from, you are liable to mistake. Here is a Lake George incident. At the dock rail of the steamboat stood a father and daughter.

"There is a typ eal German tourist," said the father, pointing out a specimen of the tribe to his Hawaiian friend.

"Hawaiian tourist at all. He was Mormon, formerly native of Bay County, and noted also as the father of the girl who married the family cookbook. It will be remembered that Victoria Moresby went into the stage of New York and the opera company, but quitted that employment and her husband rather suddenly, after which she was cast to settle down for a few years. Meanwhile, however, her father had regained control of her, and that he secured of her daughter to marriage for just enough as commonplace a coachman as ever wore a coat. Even intimate friends of the family did not know where she was secluded, and they are surprised to find that her trustworthy information on the point but Miss Moresinski—and I call her that because, as I am given to understand, she has restored the Moresini name to her—is the coachman's wife. Her husband is an economist, an associate of her parents and sisters. They are spending the season at Saratoga, where Victoria is one of the most expert of equestrienne, and a conspicuous although very modestly behaved young lady. She was with her father on the Lake George steamer, and I was told that, from Saratoga, as many as could get away day's float on the famously pretty mountain water. Jay Gould and his family frequently indulge in these excursions. The Goulds have been away for a week or more in the Adirondacks, but this week they returned to Saratoga, where they expect to spend until September.

"The Hawaiian is another millionaire broker from Lake George, and he comes here from Saratoga every year. I saw him on his last visit to Lake George, sailing with several companions, and visited, as I have been long enough to know, the dock has been there long enough, and it is one of the most institutional sums from that dot the lake, but this year St. Cephas Platt, locally famous as a celebrity of tourists, has taken possession. The island is wooded and rocky, and Platt has stocked it with snakes. He tells the tourists that he found it in a cave in the island, and that it is essential he remain in the cave to keep them in a cage for his appearance, or set them free, as is a professional snake-charmer. The boys are a small family, do not stand of a rattler, and Platt used to get a livelihood by showing the curiosities to curiosity by hunting the snakes, trying out their oil to sell to dangerous, rheumatic, their skins to pocketbook-makers, and selling the skins for the hats. Correspondents found readable matter in him, and he became a celebrity. Tourists who believed that he could profitably become a nothing of a showman. Trust is why he

There is something fascinating about a rattlesnake, and the Platt boys have a profitable business in curiosities visitors at Platt Island. Tourists are fascinated with the snakes, and are generally pleased with a view of about a hundred big rattlers, for just enough as commonplace a coachman as ever wore a coat. Even intimate friends of the family did not know where she was secluded, and they are surprised to find that her trustworthy information on the point but Miss Moresinski—and I call her that because, as I am given to understand, she has restored the Moresini name to her—is the coachman's wife. I was given to understand that I saw a genuine type of dainty culture, waving their handkerchiefs from the veranda at the departing friend. They were exquisitely dressed, their manners were gentle, and they were uncommonly pretty. But one of them cried out: "So long!" to the other excitedly. "I'm sick. I'm tired." That was not very shocking as a mere expression, but it jarred on me. I turned to my companion the girls' mother. "I have yet the slightest idea of speaking of slang, she said, quickly and with a jerk of her head. "Why, I'm sick, I'm tired." Well, I'm sick and tired." Well, I'm sick and tired." AN ARTIST'S ROMANCE.

STRANGE HISTORY OF A GRAND AND FAMOUS PAINTING.

How Konstantin Makofski, the Great Russian Painter, Produced His Masterpiece—The Famous Picture To Be Exhibited at the Detroit Exposition.

The greatest painter Russia has produced, and one of the greatest painters of Europe, is Konstantin Makofski. He was already recognized as the master of Russian art when he "deliberately set himself to the task of painting a picture that should be immortal, and that should also be a national Russian picture—a picture that should immortalize not himself only, but Russian art. Artists and art students can conceive how difficult a task he had undertaken. It was, and is, perhaps, the most difficult undertaking in all the realm of art—to create a national picture that shall be immortal. Think of all the immortal works of art in the world, and, since the classes of Rome and Greece, how few are national, done by a national artist! There are hardly a dozen really great national paintings. There are great pictures that are utterly French, or German, or Italian, or Spanish, or English; but the things they depict either belong to history, and are national only because of history, or else they show things that might happen in any other country. Their greatness depends upon their appeal to the common human nature and the common knowledge of all countries. Of distinctively American national pictures perhaps the best known, although not an immortal painting, is the popular "The Trapper's Last Shot," in which a white borderer, clad in buckskin and riding a Kentucky horse, has taken refuge in the swampy reeds of a western prairie bottom, and sits at bay upon his blown horse, with his last bullet in his long rifle, to beat off

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION—ART HALL.

A BAND OF BLOODTHIRSTY SIOUX INDIANS.

This is national and American because the white man is an American of a type that no other land produces. So are the Indians, of course, America. So is the prairie American. The weapons are also American. And finally the story told by the picture is such a story as no other country ever had to tell.

Konstantin Makofski undertook to produce a picture that would depict men and women that should be typically and unmistakably Russian, engaged in something that should be Russian also, and not to be found in any other country. Besides it must be an immortal picture. Surely a great task. He selected as his subject because the old Muscovite wedding feast is an institution peculiar to Russia. Other countries have wedding feasts; but none other ever had such a wedding feast as is peculiar to the Muscovite customs. And in his picture are none but strictly typical Russian faces and costumes, and all accessories.

The great ambition of a Russian artist is to get a picture accepted and placed in the imperial art gallery of the Czar. That gallery is difficult of access. Its paintings are the rarest masterpieces of Russian art. Konstantin Makofski set himself up in his studio for months, while he labored like a madman upon his great project. Nobody except his wife was admitted, and she so rarely that she, like all his friends, suspected insanity in her husband. His intense earnestness and labor were the pointer to a skeleton. He worked at his picture at all hours; he dreamed of it while he slept; he painted and repainted, drew and redrew, in a growing fever of enthusiasm, until at last it was completed. Then his wife died, tenderly because now she could have her husband again, and the artist fainted from prolonged exhaustion. The great picture was a triumph of genius.

The painting was sent to the Czar. The whole imperial family and the Russian artists were delighted with it. But it happened that, just then, a world's art exhibition was being held in Antwerp. The Czar, desiring that Europe should recognize Russian genius, sent the picture there. It instantly won the recognition of all Europe, and it was awarded the medalle d'honeur as of the age. Under the rules of the Antwerp exhibition the picture was sold. The Czar expected to put it in his imperial gallery; but he wanted money for his army and so to American—Mr. Charles W. Schuman—had a fabulous price and carried off the picture. He built a special private art gallery for it in New York, and refused to allow it to be exhibited elsewhere. But finally he yielded to the public desire, and consented to loan it to the Detroit International Exposition, at a cost of $5.00 per day for each day it is exhibited. Thus this great picture comes to the Detroit Exposition, where the people will have the rare pleasure of seeing it.

It is a wonderful picture, not only in its grouping, the characteristic Russian faces, the strange costumes, the room, the table and the furniture; but it is also a masterpiece of rich and exquisite coloring. It is a blaze of gorgeous colors, and yet so blended as to make a rich, harmonious whole. No description can do it full justice, and this grand painting must be seen, as it will be by thousands upon thousands, at the great Art Gallery of the Exposition, where it will be the star amid three hundred and fifty other admirable paintings and many other works of art.

The God Little Sunday School Boy.

If there is any place where one needs to keep all his wits about him it is in the Sunday School. On one occasion a young reputation in a north end school remarked in a sanctimonious tone, "My father drinks." The unwary teacher, falling into the trap, began to talk to the class of the evils of intemperance. She waxed eloquent and spoke at considerable length. The boy of the class were supposed to be in an eminently edified condition of mind little Johnny further his sentence with an air so innocent as to deceive, if it was possible, even the elders, "My father," he said, "drinks water." And he smiled exultingly into the face of his teacher, as if he were sure of her approval, and as if he enjoyed the approval of a clear conscience, or, indeed, very likely he did.—Boston Courier.

Poisoned by Cigarettes.

An 18-year-old resident of Capitol hill, Washington, was so badly poisoned by arsenic in cigarette papers that he went in to convulsions and nearly into a coffin.

Unexpected.

There is a certain public library where a zealous little man does all in his power to uphold the rules of the institution, and, at the same time, make things uncomfortable for the evil doer who regards them lightly. This library displays its newest books in a glass case, which allows their backs to be viewed from the reading room, but which can only be opened from an inclosure sacred to the officials. Readers may, however, penetrate this inner recess by asking permission, though a sign near the case warns them not to attempt it without leave.

One day a distinguished guest of the city was expected to visit its public buildings, and had intimated an especial desire to inspect its library. The little man in charge was fluttered at the prospect; he was proud of the library, and the distinguished guest was one of his heroes.

Quite early that morning an unpretending individual entered the reading room, looked about him, and then, by chance, noticed several new books in the glass case. He read their titles, and finally, led by some unwonted impulse, wandered into the sacred recess and laid his hand upon one of the volumes.

Instantly the little man was upon him, nervous in the expectancy of his hero, and very cross.

"I should like to call your attention to that sign!" cried he, thrusting it into the stranger's face. "Did you ask permission to come in here?"

"No," was the hesitating reply; but the custodian did not allow time for a possible apology.

"Then put up the book and go out!" cried he. "And next time when you are in a public building, read the signs."

The stranger meekly obeyed, but just as he turned away a deputation of his city fathers walked up the stairs.

"Ah, here you are!" said one. "We have had the museum downstairs unlocked, and when you are quite ready we will visit that."

The too zealous custodian understood at the first word; this was the distinguished guest, and this the reception he had given him. The great man smiled quietly, said "Good morning," and walked away.—Youth's Companion.

A Story About Mark Twain.

Almost as numerous as those about Mr. Lincoln are the stories that are told about Mark Twain. The Man About Town met Mr. A. H. Harris a few days ago, and knowing that the latter had been for many years a resident of "the coast," asked if he had known Mark personally. "Oh! yes," said Mr. Harris, "I knew him very intimately, both in Virginia City and in San Francisco. I went down with him once from Virginia to Frisco and we stopped together at the Occidental hotel on Montgomery street. The first day we were in town Mark went out to visit some old friends and did not show up until dinner time. We were seated at the table when he came in, and the moment he sat down he began to talk. He was in those days an inveterate talker, and when he was around no one else had the ghost of a chance to say a word. Well, as I said, he began, and paying no attention to the waiter, funneled out into one of his long stories. The waiter suggestively placed a bill of fare before him, and pushing it aside, Mark ordered some corned beef and cabbage and a glass of milk. We looked aghast, and the waiter tried in vain to suppress a smile, but Mark went on with his story, paying no attention to the expression of our faces. Presently the waiter returned with the order and stood waiting for Mark to finish. Taking advantage of a brief pause, he asked Mark if he would not like something more than the corned beef and cabbage and milk. 'No,' was the brief reply, and on he went with his story. Well, sir, do you know that fellow sat there and duplicated that order three times, and when we left the dining room he was still telling his story. Those who know Mark now some he has grown rich and famous will no doubt feel a little shocked when they learn the nature of his California diet."—St. Louis Republic.

Bright and Gladstone.

When Holl, the painter, was painting the portrait of Mr. Bright, he incidentally mentioned that he was about to perform the same operation for Mr. Gladstone. "It must be a very painful thing for you, Mr. Bright," he hazarded, "that after all these years you should have found cause to sever your connection." "Indeed it is," responded Mr. Bright, with a sigh; "to think that after we had trodden the same path together, shoulder to shoulder and hand in hand, we should be forced apart in the evening of our lives! And by what? By a bogey that has risen up within him and is beckoning him away from duty and sense—by a Frankenstein. Do you know, Mr. Holl, I seriously fear that my dear old friend's mind has really become radically undermined!" When he was at Haverden painting Mr. Gladstone, the subject of the artist's portrait of Mr. Bright cropped up. "Ah!" said Mr. Gladstone, with much interest, "and how did you find him?" "Fairly well, and he spoke very affectionately of you, Mr. Gladstone." "Did he, indeed!" replied the sitter, sorrowfully; "did he indeed! There was a cruel blow. That after a lifetime of mutual esteem and of good work undertaken and carried through together we should be divided on so clear a question. Tell me, Mr. Holl"—here his mouth twitched—"tell me, did you notice anything in the manner of my old friend when you saw him which would lead you to believe that his reason was becoming in any way unhinged?"—Jewish Messenger.

The President of the Manitoba Road Will Retire.

James J. Hill, the railroad king of the Northwest, will, it is said, resign the Presidency of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Road at the annual meeting to be held Sept. 12. Rumors of the proposed, or, to be more explicit, probable retirement of President Hill have been current "a bit." Past for several months, and are now confirmed by one who has the confidence of the magnate. The Manitoba Road has been losing money for some time, while its expenses have been enormously increased by President Hill's recklessness in building extensions and absorbing feeders. Mr. Hill's friends aver that he will resign with no regret, but will devote his time in future to travel and a general supervision of his vast interests.

A New York dispatch says: Corn sales agents of the six great coal producing companies have met at the office of the Pennsylvania Coal Company and decided to restrict the production for the month of September to 3,000,000 tons, a decrease of about one million tons from the corresponding month last year. No change was made in the prices, but the matter was left open until September 15, when another meeting will be held.

William McGlookey, Roman Catholic Bishop of the Louisville, Ky., diocese, has ordered the closing of St. Joseph College at Bardstown because such a faculty as desired cannot be made up for the ensuing year. The backbone of the shoemaker's strike at Cincinnati is broken, and the workingmen are returning to work.

Swallowed by the Earthquake.

The village of Khanovik, on the Russian frontier, has been visited by a terrible earthquake, which destroyed the larger part of the town. Great fissures opened in the earth, and in many cases the villagers were swallowed up by dozens. So far 199 people are known to have been buried alive in this way.

Legion of Honor Convention.

The eighth regular session of the Supreme Council of the American Legion of Honor met in annual convention in Washington Hall, Chicago. About 45,000 members throughout the country were represented by fifty-two delegates from the various States and Territories.

THE TRADE OUTLOOK.

An Active Fall Business Indicated by Present Prospects.

Bradstreet's review of the state of trade says:

Special features indicate no noteworthy change in the general business situation, but continued improvement is apparent. Prospects are reported at Pittsburg, New Orleans, St. Louis, St. Joseph, and Omaha. A large increase in average movement at most other points, and a general belief that fall trade will be active and satisfactory, is the outlook. Some of the week's trade reports from different sections follow: Boston—Business in all lines is active and encouraged by generally favorable crop prospects. Brooklyn—Business has been improved and prices firmer all around. This is caused by a decreased demand for dull, low-priced goods, and a better one for staples. Western—Improved business is reported, but Eastern offerings are still in excess. Philadelphia—Business is active in many lines, in view of corners of wheat and floor at cents. Exports of 1,000,000 bushels of wheat and 1,000,000 bushels of flour from this coast, against 1,000,000 bushels of wheat and 1,000,000 bushels of flour from this coast in 1896, against 18,000,000 bushels of wheat and 1,000,000 bushels of flour in 1895. Portland, Ore.—Business is active in all lines of fall goods, and prices are firmer. Seattle—Business is active and prices firmer. Tacoma—Business is active and prices firmer. Spokane—Business is active and prices firmer. Helena—Business is active and prices firmer. Butte—Business is active and prices firmer. Minneapolis—Business is active and prices firmer. A Comparison of Prices.

The following comparison of the prices of a few leading farm products in the Chicago market of August 24, 1889, with the corresponding date last year is taken from the commercial report in the Chicago Times of last Saturday:

Wheat, this year, 77 cents a bushel; last year, 91½ cents.

Corn, this year, 34¼ cents; last year, 46 cents.

Oats, this year, 20¼ cents; last year, 25½ cents.

Mess pork, this year, $9.50 a barrel, last year, $13.85.

Short ribs pork, this year, $4.72½; last year, $6.22½.

Lard, this year, $5.90 per hundred pounds; last year, $8.35.

It may be remarked that last year at this time, the farmers were "footing" for Harrison, more protection and better times; this year they are enjoying the slendid victory which they won under the banner of Harrison, Wanamaker, Carnegie & Co. Wonder how they like the change?—Lansing Journal.

The New Discovery.

You have heard your friends and neighbors talking about it. You may yourself be one of the many who know from personal experience just how good a thing it is. If you have ever tried it, you are one of its staunch friends, because the wonderful thing about it is, that when once given a trial, Dr. King's New Discovery ever after holds a place in the house. If you have never used it and should be afflicted with a cough, cold or any throat, lung or chest trouble, secure a bottle at once and give it a fair trial. It is guaranteed every time, or money refunded. Trial bottles free at R. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 6

RISKS A FIREMAN RUNS.

So Called Fire Proof Buildings Impart Special Grounds for Fear.

If there is any one thing that disheartens a fireman more than another, it is to be told that a building in which he is at work is a modern fire proof structure.

The speaker was an old fireman, who is now serving on the insurance patrol, and he had some reasons to back up this somewhat startling assertion.

It may sound strange to hear of a fireman's being at work on a "fire proof" building, but fires in so called fire proof buildings are by no means unusual, and everybody knows that some of those fires are the very ones that result in frightful loss of life. Their size and height doubtless has much to do with this, while a sense of fancied security frequently leads to gross carelessness on the part of the inmates.

But while it is only these occasional holocausts that attract the attention of the general public, firemen have to risk life and limb almost daily, and the maiming of a man for the rest of his days is dismissed with the merest mention in the newspapers. It is the unseen danger of an ordinary fire that men fear, rather than the exciting emergencies of a great conflagration, and it is because some of these modern structures are so peculiar in those unseen dangers that they are so much dreaded.

A peculiarly dangerous feature in the construction of many large business buildings is the use of iron pillars, which frequently rise in series one above the other from foundation to roof. These are especially common in wholesale establishments covering several ordinary lots, and sometimes take the place of inside walls altogether. Of course that is all right where the floors are of iron, cement and tiling, but you won't find such floors except in a few large office or bank buildings.

The mere fact that you see iron floor beams used in the construction is no indication that it will be really fire proof. Unless the floors are filled in with some non-combustible material, the iron beams are manifestly not of the slightest importance in preventing the passage of the fire, while the iron pillars are a source of great and positive danger. The trouble with them is that just as soon as a hot blast of flame strikes them they expand unequally, warp, crack, and then comes down the entire structure. And it is all down so quickly that the poor fireman has no warning, and precious little chance to get out.

The extensive use of iron in such buildings at present is in fact a source of danger all around. Even when pillars are not used, inside walls are supposed to be strengthened at every story with iron braces. In this case the effect is similar, and as soon as the heat has warped the braces out of shape, the whole interior is liable to fall unexpectedly.

As regards pillars, good solid cores of hard wood are much better than iron. They will burn, of course, but it takes a long time to burn three or four inches right into hard wood, and so long as the core remains solid, the floors are safe. That gives the firemen a chance to work, and unless the place is otherwise a regular tinder box, a well equipped fire department will save the building.

The massive office buildings now so common in lower Broadway and in Nassau and Wall streets, are really fire proof, and although there will sometimes be a mighty hot fire among the furniture in a particular office or suite of rooms, it can never extend from floor to floor.

Another very deceptive style of building is the iron front, of which so many were put up fifteen years or so ago. A peculiar danger of these is that in falling the front does not come down piecemeal, but falls like a sheet of solid metal. Half a dozen reporters had a somewhat narrow escape a year and a half ago at that big million dollar fire on Broadway, near Prince street, from this. The iron front of one of those buildings fell over as straight as a pole, without either bending or breaking, until it struck the ground and the building on the other side of the street.

The reporters were standing on the opposite sidewalk, only about twenty feet to one side, and all the telegraph wires over there were brought down on their heads. Some of them had their hats badly battered, and their cars or noses scratched.—New York News.

A Popular Wit.

Charles B. Lewis, of The Detroit Free Press, whose humor is so peculiarly American in quality, is a slender man of 40, with good features, clear, merry eyes and a ready smile. He began life as a printer on The Free Press, and was blown into the editorial room by the explosion of an Ohio steamboat, aided by the facility with which he described his immense experience. Since then Mr. Lewis has continued to amuse America over the signature of M. Quad, and has confined his talents to the paper which first recognized them. He is singularly modest concerning his own success and shirks an interview with religious care. He writes a queer little up and down hand—quaint and full of character—and uses his pen with a rapidity which leaves "i's" undotted and "t's" uncrossed. Better literary work than his southern character sketches, many of which have been republished in this magazine, has not been done in this or any other country. Mr. Lewis is in close touch with human nature, and his interpretation of it is a marvel. He is popular with everybody and his wit is without a sting, whether it flashes out by word of mouth or touch of pen.—Current Literature.

THE NEW YORK STAR.

A Daily and Weekly Newspaper.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1889.

THE STAR BUILDING.

THE NEW YORK STAR passed into the hands of new managers in November last, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of it.

During the first months of the change the improvement made in it was so pronounced that it came to be recognized at once as

A Live, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the freshest of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are crisp, positive and bold. Its Democratic principles are so pronounced and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, on its recent reorganization, selected it as the medium for placing its official action and utterances before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in nation, state and city; and is the advocate of no individual or the organ of no faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York city on Sunday. The matter selected for the literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest merit and reputation. Their united contributions each Sunday would make a volume as large as Harper's Bazaar, and treating of many more subjects than any monthly magazine published ever discusses. The whole at a cost of only 5 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in many respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a perfect epitome of the week's events, the practical news of the week carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in detail. Space is given to the class of literature most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to interest the women of the household. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but to interest him in the general news of the world, leaving the home paper of each subscriber to supply the practical information on all agricultural topics. It is an excellent paper, therefore, to obtain, through favorable club rates, along with the weekly printed in your immediate locality.

TERMS.

For the six months from July 1 to Dec. 31, 1889, we offer THE STAR, free of postage to any part of the United States and Canada, outside the limits of New York city:

Miss Jennie Ressler, of Ypsilanti, arrived yesterday for a visit with her sister, Mrs. G. R. Brown.

The fair is a little early to meet the energies in the case. Put forth a little more effort and get there.

J. A. Gellick and Amos Fox are making extensive improvements to the dock in front of their property.

An increase of 87 in the school census over last year, indicates a healthy growth of population in Charlevoix.

☞ Five to 25 per cent off on fancy crockery and all glass ware.

BERT MASON.

Secretary Stone writes us that the fair promises to be a big success. It will be, surely, if every farmer does his whole duty.

F. E. Brown starts on the Charlevoix Saturday for Chicago, where he will take a year's course at the Hahnemann medical college.

☞ Call and see our samples of ball programs, invitations, wedding cards, address and society cards, etc. New styles for season of 1889-90.

Everybody who has fruit should endeavor to help up this department of our fair as this department will probably be short of its usual show.

Mrs. G. L. Davis, wife of the grand conductor, I. O. O. F. of Michigan, and two daughters, of Lansing, arrived Tuesday night and are guests at Wm. Miller's cottage.

If you have a fine head of cabbage, a squash, pumpkin, sample of potatoes, corn, or any kind of grain, fruit, or vegetables, take it to the fair next week, and show your neighbors what you can do.

The I. O. G. T. will hold open lodge Friday evening at their hall. Addresses will be made by Rev. W. G. Clark and others, with music and recitations. Admission free. Everybody invited.

☞ James Hemmings, painter and paper-hanger, is prepared to do work of all kinds in his line, in Charlevoix or vicinity, on short notice, and guarantee satisfaction.

We expect to publish the JOURNAL one day early next week, to allow the office force to attend the county fair at East Jordan on Thursday and Friday. Bring in your favors early.

The Odd Fellows of Charlevoix, Emmet and Antrim counties, with their families and friends, will have a basket picnic at Horton's Bay on Tuesday, Sept. 17th. Make your plans to take one day out of your business, and give your family an outing. Invite your friends and bring a well filled lunch basket. Prepare for a day of pleasure.

☞At Grand Rapids last week, Mrs. Dr. Sweetland successfully removed from the face of Mrs. S. M. Carmon a large and ugly-looking cancer, which other physicians refused to touch on account of the age of the patient, she being 75 years old. Mrs. Carmon's daughter is a wife of one of the brothers of Rev. C. F. VanAuken, formerly of Charlevoix. 1w

Every farmer in Charlevoix county should gather up the best samples of his produce and take to the fair next week. Don't go there empty-handed, and then say, "Well, this isn't much of a show; why, I've got better at home." Take your best along with you; then if you have the best in the county you will get the premium, and if you haven't, you will at least have the credit and the satisfaction of having done all you could to make the show of produce complete and successful. The excursions from southern Michigan this week brought hundreds of people who will visit our fair next Wednesday and Thursday. Take something to exhibit, and have it there early on the first day, and show our southern neighbors what we can do; show them what this country is good for.

VICTIMS OF DIPHTHERIA.

Lilah Sherwood's "Canker Sore Throat" Proves Fatal.—A Case in Norwood.

It was announced in these columns last week that Mrs. Sherwood and daughter Lilah were suffering with canker sore throat. For a few days the symptoms were favorable to recovery, but on Monday Lilah rapidly grew worse, and died Monday evening. The remains were buried during the night. Mrs. Sherwood is recovering.

Lilah was a bright little girl about three years old, and was a pet with all who knew her. Her death is a great affliction to her parents and her brother who almost idolized her.

A sixteen-year-old daughter of David Vanncorunm of Norwood died last Thursday with diphtheria. Other members of the family are afflicted, but latest reports give hope of recovery.

Railroad Matters.

The JOURNAL is informed that the assumption that the C. & W. M. would operate the D. C. & E. when built is error, but that the F. & P. M. would operate it.

We are further informed that the president of the C. & W. M. has stated officially that he would have the cars running into Charlevoix within one year. To support this assertion, a surveying party is working this way from Traverse City, and will follow the shore, striking Elk Rapids, Torch Lake, and Norwood.

This program carried out will give Charlevoix two competing lines of railroad with the next year.

Peach Party.

Have you had any peaches and cream this season? They will be plentiful next Tuesday evening. The eighty young people of the Epworth League of the M. E. church are planning to have a royal good time at the parsonage lawn that evening. Prepare to participate, O ye prosperous, public spirited people, in the pleasures of the party and partake plentifully of peaches at the parsonage Tuesday evening, Sept. 10th.

CATARRH—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustatian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B. For catarrhal discharges no ulcer to make (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, on West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10eo1s

A motion to change the organization of the district to a union school was discussed and lost.

A ballot for director resulted in the election of O. S. Washburn in place of R. W. Kane, whose term expired.

A motion that the district furnish free text books to all pupils was discussed and lost.

A motion that the time of the annual meeting be changed to the first Monday in July was discussed, and thought to be very desirable, as it would give the new board two months to become familiar with work to be done, before the commencement of school, but on reference to the law it was found that the change of date could not be made until the district was changed to a union school. Those some of the voters wished the former proposition had not been defeated.

The following estimates of the amounts necessary for the ensuing year in addition to the primary school fund were voted:

Teachers' salaries	$1,800 00
Fuel	200 00
Incidentals	250 00

The number of children in the district, according to the census, is 449, and increase of 87 over last year.

The schools are in a prosperous condition, and with our new school house are a monument to which we can point with a good deal of pride.

Well Water.

The common well is the most undesirable source of all. If it is deep enough to strike a living spring of water and removed from all sources of contamination it may be unobjectionable, but these conditions are rarely met with in the country, and we may say never in large towns or cities. A well is usually placed near the house for the same reason that the barnyard, privy and sink drain are, but their existence in the same vicinity is incompatible with a pure and healthy drinking water supply. Science so far as to dig the well in the cellar, and we recall the case of a refined and cultured family who actually had both well and cesspool underneath their dwelling, and only a short distance apart. Such a barbarous practice is unworthy of a civilized race, but it is to be feared that a large proportion of wells are not much better situated.—Popular Science News.

How an Oregon Horse Frayed.

Yesterday morning, as a train load of circus was coming into town over the west side road, a short distance south of town a car containing some of the elephants was derailed. No damage was done, but two of the elephants were obliged to walk into the city. They were very indignant, either at being thrown off the track or at having to walk, and as they passed through South Portland they were waving their trunks wildly, while their drivers were what an old bullwhacker called "scolding the gad to them," and as he swore, driving six inches through their hide at every blow. A horse hitched by the side of the street through which the elephants passed was so scared that he sat down on his haunches and folded his fore feet across his breast in an attitude of prayer, and trembled until the horrid monsters were out of sight.—Portland Oregonian.

Not so Bright as Painted.

Many people who read of the fabulous salaries paid to men and women in the theatrical profession envy them their lot. These people do not know what the life of the average actor is. Of course there are exceptions to the rule, but the average professional actor's life is not particularly happy one. He makes a contract for $150 a week, and thinks himself secure in a good position. He soon finds out, however, that contracting for $150 a week and getting the money are two different matters. The pay will come regularly for a while, then it is a week late, then two weeks, and so on until finally the company breaks up, owing in members three or four weeks' salary. The expenses go on just the same, and the result is that actor finds himself penniless and without an engagement in the middle of the season. —Professional in Globe-Democrat.

THOMAS JEFFERSON'S LAST HOURS.

The Author of the Declaration of Independence Dies the Fourth.

On the southwestern slope of Monticello—in the midst of a forest hallowed by associations which have protected it from the ax, and where the winds murmur of the past—stands a plain granite monument, simple, chaste, appropriate, yet impressive. The inscription is brief, but it relates a chapter, the brightest and proudest in the life of him whose memory is consecrated by it: "Here lies buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence."

The weakness of old age came over Thomas Jefferson's sound and vigorous body gradually. He dreaded the weakening of the mental powers, and found more symptoms of this than really existed, for his mind remained clear to the last. He was much disturbed about the disposition of his papers and the estimation in which posterity would hold him, and wrote to James Madison shortly before he died: "To myself you have been a pillar of support through life. Take care of me when dead." This was because he feared the posthumous historical literature of the Federalists, a fear that has since been justified. He was theatrical to the last, and when he retired from public life it was in such a way that he posed conspicuously as the "Sage of Monticello," the good, the wise old man, the benefactor of humanity, the statesman-philosopher. His fame was so great throughout all nations that more levees were held at Monticello than at the president's mansion. Crowds invaded the grounds and house to gaze at him as he passed from one room to another, and Jefferson would not have the large hospitality of the plantation curtailed, though the guests and slaves literally ate up his estate and left the master penniless. Yet his last years were melancholy. His vast fortune was gone and his power diminished, he saw himself an historical figure of a brilliant past, even while alive.

In the winter of 1826 he began to break visibly, and in March he made his will. Then he took to reading the Bible and the Greek tragedies and brooding moodily because his work was finished. He longed to die for months before his dissolution, but as summer approached expressed a desire to live until July 4, to witness a half century of independence. His wish was granted. For weeks he lingered, life ebbing slowly, and died at 1 o'clock that day, a few hours before John Adams. He was surrounded by a host of relatives and servants, but lay unconscious of them for hours, and died without speaking a word of farewell.—Chicago Tribune.

Hoof Prints.

Oil cake is the most desirable food for young stock of all kinds—nothing better for calves, colts, sheep and pigs. We have often found it to take the place of grass in winter, in pushing the growth of calves, sheep and lambs. It is just laxative enough to keep the digestion in the best condition.

Thought is necessary in breeding, and every improvement that a man makes in his stock is evidence of the improvement of his own mind. Breeding is an elevating and developing business. It broadens men, and it is only a broad man and a man of intellect that can keep up a herd. Try breeding improved stock as a means of keeping the boys on the farm.

There is one thing the people lose sight of when they undertake to feed cattle, says an exchange, that they can do without corn. The highest price paid in the world for cattle sold on the hoof is in a country where they don't raise an ear of corn, and don't feed it. That is in the northeast of Scotland, in the county of Aberdeen. They send their animals to market in better condition and get one cent, or threepence a cent a pound, at least, more for them than any other cattle in the market, and they cannot raise corn.—Lewiston Journal.

Scientific Charity.

The workers in the new charity are active propagandists. They insist continually upon the evils of indiscriminate giving. They assail the public with facts and figures, and the churches with Bible and Science News. They assure the latter that bread indiscriminately given is cast not "upon the waters," but into the bottomless pit—that it is "the bread by which men die." They establish in each city an office to serve as a clearing house of charities, and so endeavor to prevent the overlapping of the relief given by different agencies. Their general view of the situation enables them to devise new and needed forms of benevolence, and to ascertain what additional legislation can be really useful.

It is very satisfactory when the conclusions of one set of thinkers coincide with the conclusions of others who have approached the same subject from a different standpoint. When, therefore, the philanthropist, trying to think and work in accordance with the principles of enlightened self sacrifice, finds himself agreeing in theory and practice with the economist whose guiding star has been "enlightened self interest," there is reason to congratulate them both.—A. G. Warner, Ph. D., in Popular Science Monthly.

A Sound Legal Opinion.

E. Balsbaugh Manton Esq., County Atty., Clay Co., Texas, says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with malarial fever and jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. Am satisfied Electric Bitters saved his life."

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, say ing: "He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters."

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all malarial diseases, and for kidney, liver and stomach disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c., and $1. at R. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 6

A Postage Stamp Speculation.

A story is told by a commercial traveler who, at the time of the introduction of the penny post, was doing business in the Canaed Islands. An English shilling brought thirteen Jersey pennies in exchange, so, when the penny stamps came into the island they were sold for a Jersey penny. Thirteen were sold for an English shilling, and our friend was not long in finding it out. So he bought up all the local stock of stamps—some $400 worth—and sold them when he crossed the water, realizing about 8 per cent. on his bargain. Other commercials followed suit, and the officials at the general postoffice were astonished at the number of stamps which were required for insignificant little Jersey. Settling day came—and with it the explanation. The enterprise was speedily stopped.—London Tid-Bits.

ONE YEAR IN HEAVEN.

BY ERNA E. BEDFORD.

One year in Heaven, O Redeemed little darling,
One year ago, O happy, happy little one!
A year of joy, O happy little one!
Where never yet a grave has marred the sod.

It will so dear, we often feel you hear us,
We call your name, and we know you hear;
We call your name, and love to think you hear
Here, yet in Heaven—we know, yet far apart.

In far apart? No, its not far to Heaven,
But a world and ours touch in the grave;
What we call earth is Heaven, earth and sorrow
We find in gladness in the world of God.

Happy voice, that drove away all sorrow
Happy voice, that lifted up in Heaven and Sweet the songs are that you join in singing—
Two feet, as yet, for us to understand.

New street the thought, in Heaven a fair,
Jesus angel
In all our ours, our own forevermore.
Happy, happy, happy! all earth's possessions,
In God's dear world what treasure is in store

Joy above all other joys, to see thee,
Joy above all other joys, to see thee,
Joy above all other joys, to see thee,

AN HISTORIC CITY.

THE PLEASANTEST PLACE TO VISIT IN SEPTEMBER.

A City Full of Rare Attractions for Strangers—Ten Days of Solid Enjoyment—Preparing for Seven-and-A Hundred Thousand Visitors Per Day Fully Provided for.

One of the most delightful cities on the American continent is the city of Detroit. It is one of the old American cities—the older city west of the Atlantic seaboard. It is one of the wealthiest of American cities. It is also one of the best planned and best built of American cities. No other city, except Washington, is laid out with such magnificently broad avenues and streets.

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION—CONCERT BUILDING.

Hardly any other city possesses so many architecturally original and beautiful homes and other buildings. Away from the business portion it is a city set in continuous parks and boulevards. Situated upon a vast, slightly rolling plain, with an almost uniform slope toward its river front, giving perfect drainage and an admirable surface for parks and lawns, its wide streets are bordered with grand maples and elms and miles of green grassy lawns, set off by fountains and flower beds. It is the

of Detroit people on their residence streets to have no fences in front of their dwellings. The houses are set well back from the street lines, with lawns and flower beds, fountains and statuary or other ornaments in front, leaving the architecture of the handsome buildings and all the beauties of the grounds wide open to the pleasure seeking view of the stroller along the wide tree-shaded walks, or the occupants of carriages in the streets. This makes the homes of Detroit look like rows of pretty buildings set in an immense park.

The great trees along the street make the sidewalks run through long perspectives of leafy arcades, and on many streets their long branches almost, if not quite, touch together at a lofty height clear across the broad spaces of the streets, giving a delightful, sylvan aspect to the driveways. There are also numerous small parks with fountains, lawns and inviting seats in the shade scattered over the city.

The great charm of Detroit, however, is its noble river. No other city in the world possesses such broad, deep, blue, pure and beautiful. Its narrowest point is about half a mile wide, its broadest several miles. Upon its current floats the largest commerce in the world. Like the people of Venice in Europe, the inhabitants of Detroit in summer month to love to be upon the water. Hence there are innumerable boats, yachts and steamers always in use. At various distances in every direction are places of resort, including Belle Isle park, of 700 acres, with miles of drives and walks, canals and gay boats, to and from which swift ferries continually ply at wonderfully cheap rates. These ferry steamers and excursion boats are large, broad, powerful craft, and there are enough of them to handle 20,000 or 30,000 people at once. The excursion rates in every direction are always less than a cent a mile, and often less than half a cent per mile.

The best time to visit Detroit is in September, when the heats of summer begin to be tempered by the delicious autumn coolness. From Sept. 17 to Sept. 27, inclusive, the great Detroit International Fair and Exposition, with its list of splendid attractions—its grand Art Gallery of famous paintings, its magnificent horse show, with over 1,000 of the best horses on the continent, its immense concerts every afternoon and evening, its sports, games and processions, its great band tournament, its grand cattle show, its vast building full of machinery and rare and costly displays, its wonderful show of fruits, flowers and vegetables, including the great display of the United States government, its strange show of fishes of all sorts in an immense aquarium, etc.—will be in full operation. The visitors can fill their days and evenings with EVER VARYING DELIGHT.

Besides the city, with its theatres and opera houses, there will be hourly excursions by boat and steam and electric railways to pleasure resorts in Michigan and Canada, within a radius of fifty miles, including the famous St. Clair flats, the most famous fishing and gunning resort on the continent. The great concerts at the exposition occur every afternoon and evening. There will also be regatta, base ball, athletic and other sports and games, and races daily at the exposition grounds. The fifteen acres of immense buildings, bedecked tents and sheds, the graveled walks and thoroughly drained grounds, make them independent of weather. If it should rain, no matter how violently, the cars and boats can transport 75,000 people under shelter, perfectly dry, and the vast exposition buildings can contain 50,000, and show them everything on the programme in comfort and security. There will be no postponement or alteration of programme on account of the weather, and no diminution of attractions under any circumstance, and visitors to the city can securely count upon abundance of enjoyment.

Snake Killed by a Rabbit.

A rabbit is said to have killed a snake at Seneca, Ga., a few days ago. The snake had caught a young rabbit and was trying to swallow it. The old rabbit rushed by the snake and hit it in passing. It then ran by the snake again and hit it, and repeated the operation several times. The reptile finally dropped the rabbit, crawled away a short distance and died.

WINNIE AND WALTER.

Wooing Won Winnie, Whose Warmhearted ness Wards Walter's Welfare.

"Warm weather, Walter! Welcome warm weather! We were wishing winter would wane, weren't we?"

"We were well wearied with waiting," whispered Walter, wearily. Wan, white, woe-begone was Walter, way-ward, willful, worn with weakness, wasted, waxing weaker whenever winter's wild, withering winds were wailing. Wholly without waywardness was Winifred, Walter's wise, womanly watcher, who, with winsome, wooing way, was well-beloved.

"We won't wait, Walter; while weather's warm, we'll wander where woodlands wave, won't we?"

Walter's wonted wretchedness wholly waned. "Why, Winnie, we'll walk where we went when we were with Willie; we'll weave wildflower wreaths, watch woodmen working, woodlice, worms wriggling, windmills whirling, watermills wheeling; we will win wild wheatberries, witness wheat winnowed."

Wabsach woods were wild with wildflowers; warm westerly winds whispered where willows were waving; wood-pigeons, wrens, woodpeckers were warbling wild woodnotes. Where Wabsach watermill's waters, which were wholly waveless, widened, were water-lilies, waxen white. Winifred wove wreaths with woodbine, whiteborn, wallflowers, while Walter whittled wooden wedges with willow wands. Wholly without warning, wild wet winds woke within. Wabsach woods, whistling where Winifred wandered with Walter, weeping willows were wailing weirdly; waging war with wind-tossed waters. Winifred's warp watchfulness waked. "Walter, we won't wait."

"Which way, Winnie?"

Winifred wavered. "Why, where were we wandering? Wabsach woods widen whichever way we walk; where's Wabsach white wicket, where's Winston's water-mill?"

Wistfully Walter witnessed Winifred's wonder. "Winnie, Winnie, we were wrong, wholly wrong, wandering within wild ways. Wayfaring, weather beaten waifs, well-nigh worn-out."

Winifred waited where, within wattled woodwork walls, wagons, wheelbarrows, wains were waiting, weighty with withered wood. Warbler, warmly wrapped with Winifred's well worn wadded waterproof, was waiting woefully, wholly wearied. Winnie, who, worn with watching, well nigh weeping, was wistfully, wakefully waiting Willie's well-known whistle, wholly wished Walter's well-being warranted. Witll well-timed wisdom, Walter was wound with wide, white worsted wrappers, which wonderfully well withstood winter's withering, withering winds. Wholly without warm wrappers was Winifred, who, with womanly wisdom was watching Walter's welfare, warding Walter's weakness.

"When will Willie wend where we wait?" wearily wondered Walter.

"Child, Walter," whispered Winnie; "who was whooping?"

"Whereabouts?"

Welcome whistling was waking Wabsach woods when winter's wind warfare waxed weaker. "Winnie! Walter!" Winifred's wakefulness was well-grounded. "We're well, Willie; we're where Winston's wagons wait." Without waiting, Willie was within Winston's woodwork walls. "Welcome, welcome, Willie;" Winnie was weeping with weariness with watching Walter, weak with wayfaring.

"Why, Winnie! wise, watchful, warm-hearted Winnie," Willie whispered, wheedlingly, "we won't weep; Walter's well; what were Walter without Winnie!"

Wholly wonderful was Winifred's well-timed, womanly wisdom, which well warranted weakly Walter's welfare. Whenever wandering within Wisbeach woods with Winnie, Walter would whisper, "What were Walter without Winnie! wise, watchful, warm-hearted Winnie!"—Old Scrap Book.

Odgen Season.

A famous French painter, Nestor Roqueplan, who was well known as a wit, was once invited to dinner by a newly rich family, who were quite willing—for once—to have the witty painter at their sumptuous table, for the purpose of "showing off." When the evening was over, and the guests were departing, the host shook the painter by the hand, and said, in offhand French fashion: "M. Roqueplan, we are much delighted. We should be glad to have you always come and dine with us." "Always!" asked the painter. "Yes, yes, always!" Roqueplan smiled a little sarcastically, and went away. The next evening, promptly at 6, the painter put in his appearance at the rich man's house. The family seemed a little surprised, but he was welcomed, and the dinner passed very pleasantly. Next evening he came again and was rather coolly received. "What!" he exclaimed, "weren't you expecting me?" "Oh—oh, yes, certainly!" said the host, with a forced smile. This was kept up for a week, when the family gave orders that if Roqueplan came again he was to be told that they had gone out of town to dine. The servant gave him the message when he rang the bell as usual. "Ah!" said he; "well, I will just run up and get my umbrella that I left last night." He presented himself at the table just as the family were seating themselves for the meal. This time, however, he took pity on them, and, after reading them a lecture on the unwisdom of saying a great deal more than they meant, he took his departure.—San Francisco Argonaut.

WON THE FUTURITY.

W. L. Scott's Colt Takes the $55,000, with St. Carlo Second.

At the Sheepshead Bay track, near New York, fifteen thousand people saw W. L. Scott's greatest colt chosen win the Futurity race—the richest prize ever run for in this country—more than twice as much as the average value of the Grand Prix de Paris, the English Derby, or the St. Leger. The colt carried 109 pounds, was ridden by a young English lad named Fred Day, and is trained by Mr. Leighton, who for eight years was in the employ of Mr. Withers, and for the past ten years has been the general manager of Mr. Scott's racing and industrial interests at Erie, Pa. The value of the race to the winner was $54,925; to the second, $3,835; to the third, $2,295.

THREE DROWNED.

Two Fishermen and a Boy Capsized Off Orange and Lost.

At Chicago John Crocker, owner of a fishing smack; Charles E. Bluhm, a 15-year-old boy, and a man named "J.A." who lived with Brocher, were drowned in the lake off Thirty-eighth street. The party started for South Chicago in Brocher's boat about 7 by after 1 o'clock, and when about a mile and a half from shore a squall blew up and their boat was capsized. Several persons witnessed the capsizing, but were unable to reach the boat before the unfortunate occupants went down. Mr. Brocher is said to be a Swede, a fisherman, and the man known as "Ed" was his helper and lived with him. The boy, Charlie Bluhm, was formerly a newsboy, but was at the time of his death employed as a messenger.

AGREED ON A BANKRUPTCY LAW.

The Minneapolis Convention Appoints a Committee to Go to Washington.

In the national bankrupter convention at Minneapolis, Minn., the committee on bills reported that the convention and a trustee receiving pay after having been removed for cause should be left to the jurisdiction of the court. If an assignment is proved to be fraudulent the bankrupt should not be discharged by the court. Several unimportant amendments were made to the Torrey bill, and a committee of five was appointed to wait on President Harrison and ask that he recommend Congress in his next annual message to pass a bill of similar import to the bill as amended by the convention.

THE CROP OUTLOOK.

A General Lack of Rain Throughout the Country Is Reported.

The following is the weekly weather crop bulletin, issued by the Signal Office:

It has also been slightly cooler than usual in the Southern, Middle Atlantic and New England States, the Lake Region, the Valleys of the Missouri and Upper Mississippi Valleys and the Upper Lake Region. Rain was generally scarce, the daily temperature over Lake Michigan westward to the Missouri Valley averaging 3 to 5 degrees above the normal. There has been much less rain than usual throughout the country east of the Rocky Mountains, and some damage has occurred in Michigan and the Northwest, but no rain occurred in the Ohio and Tennessee Valleys, Illinois, Eastern Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Northern Tennessee, Northern Alabama and Northern Georgia, and during the week was unusually warm and dry throughout the corn belt and the entire Southern States, causing over a material injury. The crop is much in need of rain in some localities in Ohio, where it has sustained some damage, also in Indiana, Illinois and Missouri. Early corn in the Ohio Valley has much improved by the hot, dry weather. The absence of rain has injured late corn in Ohio, and somewhat in Illinois and Missouri. Early corn in Iowa and Nebraska is ripening fast. The CHICAGO has already pledged five million dollars to defray the expenses of the world's fair of 1892.

THE Saginaw Press, an evening paper advocating democratic sentiments, is a new candidate for public favor in Saginaw.

THE Saginaw Courier and the Morning Herald has been consolidated and are as combined a strong democratic newspaper.

AT a conference of southern republicans in Washington recently, resolutions were passed, denouncing the Harrison administration, and declaring in favor of Gen. Alger of Michigan for president in 1892. In the next congress they will support Burrows of Michigan for speaker of the house of representatives. Verily everything is not harmonious in the republican camp.

The Democratic Position.

When on the 6th day of November, 1888, more than five and-a-half millions of American citizens, the grandest army of free men that ever rallied around any leader in any cause, had cast their ballots for the democratic candidates for president and vice-president of the United States, they were compelled to see their victory snatched from them because in a single state they had fallen short of a plurality by less than seven thousand votes. Could the result have been decided by the total popular vote they would have enjoyed the triumph to which they were so fairly entitled by the justice of their cause, the character of their candidates and the candid and patriotic spirit of their appeal to the judgment of the whole people. By a plurality of nearly a hundred thousand the voters of the nation then manifested their preference for Grover Cleveland over Benjamin Harrison as their chief magistrate. "There are defeats," says Montaigne, "which are triumphant to the emulation of victories." Such was the defeat of the democracy in the great contest of 1888.

In that contest the control of the executive and the popular branch of the legislative department of the government was wrested from our hands for the time, but in that contest the democratic party took firmer ground in favor of its great fundamental principles, gained new blood and courage, renewed its youth, and consecrated itself afresh to the sacred cause of firmly maintaining and righteously administering in the greatest nation in the world a just government of all the people, by all the people, for all the people. This was the democracy of Jefferson and Jackson, the democracy that distrusted and thrust aside the aristocrats who wished to save the people from the trouble of governing themselves during the early years of the republic, the democracy that stifled the nullification schemes of Calhoun, fought the consolidation policy of Henry Clay and destroyed the United States bank when it became an engine of political warfare against the rights of the people. To keep the government simple and to keep it pure, to keep it in the hands of the people and out of the hands of separate classes, combinations and interests, has been the grand aim of the democratic party from the foundation of the government. How can any honest man deny that such was its purpose in the campaign of 1888—that such remains its purpose today!

By four years of earnest and careful effort to improve the public service in all its departments, resulting in large and manifold benefits to the people the democratic administration had earned a right to a continuance in power. In his fidelity to what he believed to be a cardinal principle of our government, the president had gone to the extreme of warning officers of all its departments, including all his own appointees, to abstain from political agitation or from activity which might be deemed an interference with the rights of the people. So far from building up a political machine he sought to make the existence of all selfish political combinations impossible. By its every word and act the democratic administration of 1885-89 disproved the prediction of its enemies that the government would not be safe if committed to its control. What was the reward of this disinterested policy? When the party took a united stand in favor of some moderate reductions in customs duties which would have benefited no one so much as the smaller manufacturers of the northern and eastern states, the fact that southern democrats were prominent in urging these beneficial changes, and the other fact that every applicant for a government pension, however undeserving his claim, was not promptly invited to walk into the treasury and help himself to the public funds, enabled the republicans to raise once again the old sectional issue, and by the most intrepid lying and the most unprecedented political trickery to so mislead public sentiment in the north as to accomplish the defeat of the democracy.

The administration which was lied down and out of power last November is now contrasted in the minds of the people with the administration of Benjamin Harrison. No democrat, however extreme his partisanship could desire that this contrast should be more striking or more extraordinary than it is. Instead of a government for the people and by the people we have a government of republican politicians for republican politicians. No single act is determined on at the white house, or in the executive departments, without careful calculations as to what personal or political benefit may be derived from it, nor is a single appointment made which does not have behind it a personal or political object wholly apart from the interests of the people. Indeed, the masses of the people may well feel that they have ceased to have anything to do with the government. They are now simply spectators of the building of Mr. Harrison's political machine. We do not exaggerate when we state the fact that no administration ever accumulated such a load of popular disgust in so short a time as the administration that is now in power.—National Democrat.

WHERE everything is exceptionally good, it is difficult to make a selection of the very best; and this is the dilemma we find our selves confronted with each month when our favorite periodical, Demorest's Monthly Magazine, arrives. The October number is bristling with good things. To start off with, the colored frontispiece, "The Wedding Trip," is a lovely picture in the same style as "A Yachting Party," given in the previous number and follows naturally in sequence; for is not a yachting party the forerunner of a wedding trip? In addition, there are nearly 150 other illustrations, including a very interesting series showing various kinds of "Human Habitations." Then among the stories are one by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and one ("The Little Rebel") about Abraham Lincoln, and one for "Our Girls" about "A Butterfly in Harness." Christine Terhune Herrick defines in "A Bow of Ribbon" the mission and sphere of that decorative trifle; "The Chemistry of Cooking" is discussed in simple and intelligible language; and "Malaria; Its Cause and Cure" furnishes numberless suggestions about that fell disease so prevalent at this season. Besides, there is a supplement to the fashion department, embodying lots of ideas that will be of great assistance in planning the winter outfit. But every one needs to have this comprehensive Family Magazine every month. It is published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th street, New York.

CATARRH.—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10oct3

The weather promises good for the fair. We intend to take it in, and hope to see all our neighbors there.

We hear that Mrs. James Reed died last night. We have not learned the circumstances, but she has been a great sufferer for many years. Mrs. Reed was well known in this county, as she and her husband are old pioneers, and many friends will mourn her death.

Mr. Parker moved into his new house yesterday. We are glad to welcome him and his family among us.

Elder Dorrance has gone to conference this week.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE COMPLETED

A Handsome, Well-Built, Well-Finished Structure.

The new brick school-house, about which so much has been said and written during the past four months is completed, and school will begin therein on September 23d.

The facts concerning the burning of the old building, the appointment and organization of the building committee, voting and negotiating the bonds, approving plans, etc., have already been given to the public in these columns.

The building committee, to whose energy and fidelity we are indebted for this handsome completed structure are L. D. Bartholomew, E. Carpenter, R. W. Kane, John Nicholls, Dr. Lewis, J. Milo Eaton, S. M. See and Amos Fox. As soon as work was begun on the building Alex. Cameron was appointed superintendent, and he with the committee have devoted their entire energies to the making of a school-house which should stand to their credit, and worthy of the district. Their success is complete.

The design and arrangement of the the rooms were suggested by L. D. Bartholomew, and the working plans drawn by J. T. Kirkpatrick.

PLAN OF FIRST FLOOR.

PLAN OF SECOND FLOOR.

The above diagram gives a better idea of the size and arrangement of the rooms than any description we can write. [It was our intention to have a picture of the building made, but lack of ready cash prevented.]

The rooms are finished in native hard wood (ash, birch, cherry and maple) oil-finished, and are handsome. They must be seen to be appreciated. In the stairs, especially can be seen some elegant pieces of timber.

The seats and furniture are of the latest improved styles, and designed for the comfort of the pupils. Each room is supplied with hooks and stalls for children's wraps, which are always under the eye of the teacher.

The ceilings are high, the windows large, and the light is as near perfect as can be.

In the attic and tower are large rooms, the latter having excellent light, which may at some future time be utilized for library, museum, or something of that sort. These rooms and the tower above are reached by a safe, easy stairway. From the top of the tower one has an excellent view of the town and surrounding country.

The closets are on the west side of the building, partially detached, yet connected by covered ways, and thoroughly ventilated.

The heating and ventilating of the building is by the Hess system. A battery of three furnaces side-by-side in the basement furnishes the heat. The cold air is admitted through pipes in the furnaces into a warm air chamber, from which the rooms are supplied by flues. Each room is under the direct control of the teacher, who can regulate the temperature as desired. The foul air passes out thorough small registers in the floor, passes under the floor, and into a flue in the chimney which rises ten feet in hight above the roof. This arrangement gives a constant supply of good pure air, warmed to a temperature to make the child always comfortable in ordinary health. In the hall below is a register in the floor, closely connected with the warm air chamber, which will enable all pupils to get thoroughly warm and dry in the extreme cold weather in winter, before passing to their rooms.

The grounds are to be graded, and walks built, and everything will be in readiness for the school on the morning of Sept. 23d.

The building is one in which every citzen of Charlevoix can have a just pride. It has been built and finished within the original estimate. It has been built better than could have been done by contract for the same money. There is not a suspicion of jobery or slight so far suggested in the purchase of any of the material, or in any of the work. Every sentiment so far expressed is that it is an honest building, and that is more than can be said of many public buildings in other cities. All have done their work well, and deserve the thanks of the community.

He was found at Boyne City, and brought back for trial. Last Friday Justice McLeod sent him to the state house of correction for 90 days.

A Daily and Weekly Newspaper.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1889.

THE STAR BUILDING.

THE NEW YORK STAR passed into the hands of new managers in November last, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of it.

During the first months of the change the improvement made in it was so pronounced that it came to be recognized at once as

A Live, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the freshest of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are crisp, positive and bold. Its Democratic principles are so pronounced and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, on its recent reorganization, selected it as the medium for placing its official action and utterances before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in nation, State and city; and is the advocate of no individual or the organ of no faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York city on Sunday. The matter selected for the literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest merit and reputation. Their united contributions each Sunday would make a volume as large as Harper's Magazine, and treating of many more subjects than any monthly magazine published ever discusses. The whole at a cost of only 2 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in many respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a perfect epitome of the really important news of the week carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in detail. Space is given to the class of literature most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to interest the women of the household. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but to interest him in the general news of the world, leaving the home paper of each subscriber to supply the practical information on all agricultural topics. Its an excellent paper, therefore, to obtain, through favorable club rates, along with the weekly printed in your immediate locality.

THE UNREMEMBERED DEAD.

BY MRS. SAPOHNE B. HORNSBY.

They lived, they suffered, they died, they rotted,
Yet see how vacant are their places,
Where are their tones? Where their joys?
Those yearning, aimless human faces.

They must have loved the sweets of earth,
They must have had their hopes and aims;
They must have had their loves and hatreds,
Their fill of pain, their nearly pleasure.

Why, then, is all so shadowy,
So drear, dim and so silent here?
There should be left some memory,
However faint—some vestige dear.

Here once, like us, they hailed the dawn;
Their children's laughter also imbued here.
And yet how heedless life goes on,
Without a sigh, without a tear.

They were our kindred souls, and though
They left behind no trace of glory,
Still something of their lives we know—
Our beating hearts tell us their story.

Phantoms! Are there no Phantoms here,
Spirits of the Forgotten Dead?
Yes, there are Phantoms everywhere—
Shapes that we dream, not specters dread.

We cherish life—we would not die;
We long to live in present still,
We dread Oblivion—this is why
Will ghosts we people vale and hill.

NEW YORK CITY.

FATHER AND I.

BY MANDA L. CROCKER.

I had ridden all day, and now, at sundown, I found myself in an isolated spot, without any prospect of a decent night's lodging.

No sign of a habitation could I see, as I passed this road, but a hut in the dusky shadows—nothing but hilly, sparsely timbered country, as far as the eye might discern.

I had started some six weeks previous for the Indian country in the West, intending to purchase a home with the little allowance I possessed. I had been rather unfortunate all my life. When a mere child, my father went to the frontier, and my mother, after having looked in vain for word from him for a year or more, concluded that the Indians had murdered him—they at that time being in a state of hostility—and, gathering her little all about her, went back to New York, broken-hearted and disconsolate. In a few months after her arrival she sank into the grave, leaving me a penniless orphan.

A gentleman of her acquaintance adopted me and removed me, with his family, to Indiana, before the grass grew green on my mother's grave, and thus hurried me away from all I had dear on earth, and many were the bitter tears shed in the deep woods of Hoosierdom in memory of the lonely grave near Erie.

Nevertheless, when I became of age I remembered, in looking over the past, that I had loved a kind father in my foster-parent, and when he gave me quite a little sum and a sympathetic pony, saying, "Go West, Clifford, and get rich," I started at once.

As a sequel, at the close of a cold, raw November day, I found myself toiling over a winding, hilly road—bound for somewhere, I hardly knew where.

Dismounting, I slipped the rein over my arm and concluded to walk down the rocky declivity before me; as I proceeded slowly, wondering where I might camp out for the night, I came suddenly on an old man, with a bundle on his back, at a turn in the road.

He looked up with a quiet "Good evening," and turned aside to let me pass. "Could you tell me," I said, "where I might find a shelter for the night?"

He looked at me again steadily for a moment, then, without answering my question, asked cautiously where I hailed from.

"From Indiana," I replied. "I am hunting a fortune in the great West, and I rather think I have struck a poor section to-day."

"I guess ye have, sir; but just beyond those hills lies a beautiful strip of farming land," he said.

"As to your stopping for the night," he continued, shifting his bundle a little, "if you're not over particular as to 'commodations, why, I reckon you can hunk with me; and your nag can do very well in the shed with a bunch o' fodder. That's the finest in the world, stranger, but it is the best I know of, unless you go ten miles further by the creek."

"I shall be very thankful for your hospitality," I said; and we trudged on together in the gathering night, until we came to another road branching off into the scattered timber.

"I live up here a ways," he remarked, turning abruptly into the dim outlined way. A quarter of a mile further on said we came to his domicile. "Here's where I stay," he said, opening the door to a rude log hut which seemed to have grown into the side of a hill.

On entering I found it quite comfortable on the inside, despite the unpromising exterior. "Now rest yourself," he said, putting down his bundle and striking a light, "while I give your nag a bite under the shed." With this the old man laughed a little, as a sort of apology, I thought, and disappeared outside.

I sat thinking. Somehow I rather liked his looks. Not so very old, he seemed cheerful, notwithstanding his gloomy surroundings, and I wondered why he was here. I remembered "Wife is dead," I thought, looking about me around the plainly furnished, one-roomed abode. "Maybe a confirmed old bachelor, or—a notorious character hiding from justice, and one who intends finishing me for his own aggrandizement," whispered an evil genius in my ear.

This suggestion made me shiver and I sat revolving it in my mind until it seemed the most natural thing in the world, and by the time he returned I was in good trim to watch every movement of the unsuspecting old man as he busied himself about the evening meal.

"A short nag is soon curried," he said with a smile, arranging the corn bread, bacon and coffee on the table. I was somewhat taken aback however—in the evil prompting considerably—when mine host of the cabin bowed his head reverently and asked God's blessing on the frugal repast.

"Well!" I thought, "he surely isn't an escaped convict, unless he has repented here among the hills." And truly it seemed to me, just then, a fitting locality for repentance of the deepest kind.

"What might your name be?" he asked, as he handed me the second cup of coffee.

When I told him, he gave a little start and eyed me curiously for a moment, before he settled back into his former quiet demeanor, but said nothing.

After the repast he took a pipe from the shelf and asked me if I smoked. Upon my replying that I did not, he filled the corn-cob invention with home-made tobacco and sat down to enjoy a whiff by himself.

"I don't use tobacco much" he said apologetically; "but I generally smoke afore I go to bed, a pipe or so; it kind of drowns trouble."

"Then you have had trouble?" I asked.

"Yes, young man, a great deal of sorrow, though youngsters can't understand it by the telling," he replied, with a sigh.

My heart softened toward the old man as he sat thoughtfully looking into the fire, while the light danced over his long, gray beard.

I had a great curiosity to find out more of his history; but he revealed nothing more, and, as I was fatigued with the journey of the day, I was ready to retire.

"You can sleep with me, or bunk on the settee," he said, at bedtime. I preferred to sleep alone, and forthwith lowdow from a great red chest in the corner of the room a couple of heavy comforables and proceeded to make up a bed for his guest on the aforesaid "settee."

I forgot my suspicions as I rolled up in my impromptu couch and dozed off to restful repose.

How long I slept I know not; but I was awakened suddenly by some one's breath in my face.

A chill of horror ran through my veins. Was he going to kill me? O, that I had taken warning of my intuition of the early evening!

"MY HEART SOFTENED TOWARD THE OLD MAN AS HE SAT THOUGHTFULLY LOOKING INTO THE FIRE."

Perhaps he meant to see, only, if I was asleep, so that he might ransack my luggage. I lay quiet as possible while the old fellow reconnoitered. He touched my forehead cautiously; gently and cautiously at first; but when he supposed I still slept, he ran his fingers along over my left temple carefully several times, as if searching for something. I fully expected to feel the cold steel plunged into my unfortunate head each minute; but it seemed ages to me that the old man bent over me in absolute silence.

I could hear the wind whistling without, and now and then the rain on the narrow window; and, now, I could hear the suppressed breathing of the old man as he, proceeding with his strange vigil, knelt by my side.

I could see, through half-open eyelids, the aged head bending lower, until presently the withered lips were pressed to my brow, and a tear fell on my upturned face.

I could stand it no longer. Thinking that, perhaps, I had lodged after all with some crazed old being, I opened my eyes and moved my hands as if waking from deep slumber.

"My son!" he said, softly and tenderly, looking into my widen-open eyes.

There was something in the voice and fervency of tone and manner that made my blood tingle and my heart throb faster. I sat up and gazed at the bright, happy face of mine host. "Your son?" I queried, a strange feeling of conviction taking possession of me.

"Yes," he replied, taking my hands in a warm, trembling clasp. "You are my long-lost Harry—my dear little son!"

"Am I?" I asked, in a bewildered way; "I feel that I must be."

"Yes," continued he; "when I came in from feeding your pony I thought you resembled my boy, as I remembered him, a great deal. That was why I asked you your name, and when you answered me, 'Harry Clifford,' I sure of it; but I didn't want to make a mistake, so after you were asleep I ran my fingers over your temples to find a scar I was sure you must still carry. You got it by being terribly hurt once with a stone, I remember. And the scar is right here; I s'pose you've noticed it often," and the hand went up again to my temple and touched a small callosed spot which I had often taken notice of.

"Yes" I exclaimed; "I remember the fall over the rocks at Tully, father."

As the tears broke down and wept in my arms for some minutes. It is needless to say that I, too, shed tears.

Time, is that lonely dwelling and the cheerless, cold autumn night, the aged man found his son whom he had mourned as dead for years; and I had found my father.

"They told me you were both dead," he said, "when I got away from the Indiana that took me captive; and when I couldn't find a trace of either of you, I came West again and lived alone."

After pausing to wipe away the glittering tears, he continued: "I've a good piece of farming land, Harry, a few miles further on; a man is renting it now, as I'm not able to work much, and so I live up here alone. I could live with them, I suppose," he said, presently, "but I'd rather not.

"But," and his old face brightened wonderfully in the dim firelight, "the man's time is out in the spring and he wants to go South; so we'll go over and manage the farm, won't we, Harry?"

And I, more delighted than ever, and overcome with happiness and good fortune, murmured, "Yes, father."

Well, we did go over to manage the farm; and I invested my means in improvements, so that we now are getting along finely.

That old gentleman sitting there on the porch is my father, whose story you've heard in part; and that lady flitting about the house in there is my wife.

Happy? Oh, yes; we are very happy in our cozy Western home; and I often look at father and remember the old man with a bundle who seemed so willing that I should lodge with him.

Wood in Her Stomach.

A case which is likely to attract the profound attention of the medical minds of the State has been developed in Bedingfield, Ala.

Mrs. J J Murphy, the wife of a laborer, died recently after a short illness of some disease of the stomach, which is like a club in its system of distributing. The members are therefore confounded, and they have issued a pamphlet, in which they say: "Inasmuch as it is a matter of Marechal Niel roses, a stove throat and revealed on the stuff, the effect which is most artistic and charming. They have a great additional charm from the fact that they are decidedly scented with the perfumes of the natural flowers, which they so perfectly represent. In several instances girls have worn the wood stuff of real flowers at a cost of not less than $5, and from that up to $100. Mrs. Murphy also came to tell the Tuxedo balls and balls, and was filled and worthless nights.

"Mr. Murphy carried at a Tuxedo luncheon simulated a rose. When closed it looked a bud; when it was half opened it looked a fully blown rose; and as they were scented with the delicious perfume of the rose, or flowers, the illustration was complete. Another effect was that it looked

DAYS OF PLEASURE.

A GREAT HOLIDAY OF DELIGHT FOR THE MULTITUDES

About to Open in Detroit—The Good Things Prepared for the Detroit International Fair and Exposition—Amusement, Instruction and Business Combined—A Rare Programme.

The great national fairs and celebrations of ancient Rome and Greece were made attractive to the people of the civilized world by popular amusements, such as gladiatorial combats, fights with wild beasts, chariot races and athletic games, in which men and beasts were often slain; imperial, religious, military and civic ceremonies, processions and displays, etc. The ancients well knew that multitudes always seek amusements as well as instruction and profit.

DETROIT INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION—THE OFFICES.

Great bodies of people in all ages and countries, demand to be amused when they assemble, no matter how serious or how important may be the business that holds them together, and the more they are amused and delighted the brisker and more profitable is the business done.

Upon this custom of Rome has Gen. Wallace, the famous author of the book, founded the splendid drama of Commodus. The fair week in Rome gave the conspirators an opportunity to assemble in the capital from distant parts of the Roman empire without being questioned or suspected, and she gave them a chance to approach the palace of the emperor during the festivities without being surprised by the guards.

A GREAT MODERN FAIR

requires the same treatment. The masses of people must be amused. They must see new attractions besides the sober business shows of the exhibitors. The crowds of people expect to have, and will have, a gay holiday time; otherwise they would not congregate together.

Recognizing this fact the managers of the great Detroit International Fair and Exposition, which is to open Sept. 17 there and last ten days, have provided liberally for the amusement of the people on a scale unparalleled for variety and interest. Every day is expected to have its distinct attraction, so as to make the whole ten days' time one continual succession of rare pleasures. From the opening to the close every hour will be occupied with some rare delight for the eye, the ear and the intellect. Music, art, games, tournaments, regattas, races, pageants, processions and displays will succeed each other continually and add point to the unrivaled solid business of the great exposition.

ON OPENING DAY

there will be imposing ceremonies, in which the governors of states and dignitaries, including those of Canada, and the city authorities will take the lead. That day will also be children's day and charity day. The inmates of all the charitable institutions in and near the city will be admitted free, and the thousands of school children will be admitted on payment of only 10 cents each. The little ones will have special cars, and will be received by the governor of the state and other dignitaries. Everything will be done to make it a day of delight to the happy youngsters. On the second and third days, Sept. 18 and 19, will occur the great

INTERNATIONAL YACHT TOURNAMENT,

in which about 100 of the best boats of Canada and the United States will compete for prizes, medals and championship. Each evening of these two days there will be a unique musical concert, in which all the bands will play together the national airs of the United States, Canada and other countries. This will be a magnificent display also. One hundred bands mean 1,500 to 2,000 musicians. When this great aggregation of two full regiments of musicians in their splendid uniforms, with colors waving and instruments glittering, with their gorgeous drum majors in the front, and drawn up in a solid line of sixty rods long and four rank deep, the will be something as remarkable as the grand crash of sound when they all play "The Star Spangled Banner" together. Nothing like it has ever been seen or heard in this country.

REVIEW AND GLITTERING SPECTACLE

After these days every other day will also have its special grand attraction. There will be fireman's day, with its fine display of the brave fire laddies in uniform. There will be regatta day, in which boat and yacht races will take place on the broad river in front of the exposition grounds, where the whole course can be seen from the vast balconies of the exposition buildings; besides a grand review of about 1,000 boats, yachts and pleasure vessels, making the business water pageant for the multitude that could be conceived. There will be military drills and reviews by each corps; horse races on the exposition track; athletic games and sports; the wonderful Palace of Illusions, whose mysteries exceed in beauty and strangeness anything ever before shown; the strange display of all sorts of live fishes in immense aquariums, with the splendid floral display of rare and beautiful flowers; a grand collection of machinery, inventions and models; rich and costly goods and wares; the greatest show of blooded horses and cattle ever collected in the west; the rare show of pet animals and birds of all sorts; the grand Art Hall, with its magnificent collection of great paintings, sculptures, gold and silver ware, etchings, engravings, tapestry, etc.; the rare and fascinating show of pigeons in great numbers and of strange beauty, including, in the most of the multitude, extraordinary spectacle of

SALMON LEAPING HIGH WATERFALLS;

A GRAND PIGEON RACE IN THE AIR,

by the swiftest and strongest trained flyers on the American continent.

In short there will be all the attractions that busy, could desire at the great fair itself, past the doors of which will pass in full view all the great commerce of the lakes, in a constant succession of steamers, vessels, barges and boats. And if the visitor is tired of the exposition, the city, with its theatres and opera houses, its magnificent Belle Isle park and its other attractions, is at hand, and fast excursion steamers constantly invite the taking of a half or whole day of pleasure in visiting any of the popular summer resorts within 100 miles of Detroit at cheap prices.

Compared with ancient fairs the great modern exposition, puts their glories. The modern fair is also Christian and innocent in its tendencies. It uplifts civilization and morals, benefits humanity, teaches the arts of peaceful industry, and art, science, invention and commerce, and is a great and beneficent educational influence wholly for good.

How to Build Up a Town.

Various ways and means have been discussed as to the best way to boom and build up a town, but we see no better way to accomplish it than by following the suggestions as set forth by L. A. Ely, of Muir, Mich., in an article to the merchants of that town on the subject. He says:

"I would like to call your readers' attention to the much talked of booming a town and building up a village. The first thing absolutely necessary to a complete success is work together for the real good of the town to be boomed. I am talking of the merchants who read this paper, and shall talk of a class they are familiar with, namely, themselves. I start with the assertion that every farmer's team driven into the town is a benefit not only to every dealer in the place, but a benefit to the property value of the inhabitants. If you live in a town and own any property there, its worth is always enhanced by a lively appearance on the streets, caused in no way so easily as by lots of farm wagons in the streets at all times of the day and evening. Strangers are first impressed with this particular phase of a village's prosperity, and, if looking for a location, the choice will light on that town that shows the most life on the streets when they are there. The main thing is to bring the farmers to the place, and when once there, to use them in such a manner that they are bound not only to come again but to tell their neighbors, who will come also, and in this a lasting 'boom' will light on the place and stay with it. My experience in this manner of bringing farmers to town and holding their trade will be of lasting benefit, as the experience is actual and the benefit sure. Two years ago I adopted the plan of paying the very top price for butter and eggs, often paying above market quotations for A No. 1 stock. Of course I only and always pay in trade, by which I was able to pay far above the stand and price for these two articles so near to the average farmers heart. Some weeks, when the other dealers would cut down the prices of these things, I would raise the price sometimes to such a price that all the profit on a ton of butter and 30 crates of eggs, or rather on the goods that I paid for them with would be nothing at all or very close to this. Right here was the secret of my success, because no other town in the country was paying as much, in 3 to 5 cents, as I was for butter or eggs. This fact was spread for miles, and more teams could be counted on the streets in one day than we were used to seeing in a week. Do not suppose that I received all the benefit of this influx, but then I got the large end. Every man in town done as much as I again business then as formerly, but this did not harm me in the least, for the trade I secured to myself more than paid any occasional loss, while the rise in my real estate was considerable. Often at business men's meetings, the other merchants would try to combine and run down the price of butter and eggs to a paying basis, when I would advance as much as they would fall.

One time last spring in particular, the price agreed upon for eggs was 7 cents when we were paying 11 cents. I heard the board of trade price is 7 cents for eggs and 12 cents for butter from dozens of sources in the next day or two. My course of action was plain. I would pay 14 cents for eggs and 16 cents for butter. I paid only in trade, so that for the week that I held this high price there was no profit at all in the sales, nor was there any loss, and the amount of free advertising that I got more than paid for my labor, while the town received a benefit that will last a whole year. Dozens of teams were driven here for 20 miles that never would have come but for the extra price that I paid. Property values advanced, the general business of the town doubled, my trade for the month was five times the same as for the previous year, and the net profit more than double for the month. Again, wishing to stir up a little enthusiasm in the place, I advertised to sell all kinds of spices at the uniform price of 20 cents per pound in full pounds only. That was the last two weeks in May, and it is safe to say that more teams were in the village in the two week than in the months of May and June, 1887. Do you think it pays to work cheap for a few days, or would you rather trade one fourth as much at full profit? The conclusion is easily drawn. If the farming community will go elsewhere to sell their produce their road goes also, and the opposition town will get the plums. I would suggest that the farmer's produce be held at its full value at all times, as nine out of ten farmers would sooner pay 25 per cent. more for goods than take 2 cents less for their produce, which is usually a large part of the farmer's cash. It may take a little backbone to follow the plan that I do, but it pays. More than this, the influence of a much extra business will work wonders in one's general cash trade. In this way a town can be 'boomed' by one man alone, but action in concert will be more satisfactory and the results better, while the balance of profit will be on the right side every time. In conclusion I will say that universally high prices for farmer's produce will add more to the town's prosperity than any other thing will do, while the reverse, uniformly low prices, will exert a damaging influence on the trade of the town. Then fellow merchants, use your full powers to keep up the value of farm produce and your reward shall be great. Yours for general welfare.

For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is wonderfully beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's—the only $1 Sarsaparilla worth $5 a bottle.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I owe much to your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Molunous, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 79 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: 'After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned.'"

The boys are having a good joke on Nick Shores. Coming home from Charlevoix one day last week he fell asleep, and was seen to raise his whip every few minutes like one fishing who has a good "bite." It can only be explained by the fact that Nick has been a fisherman's guide most of the summer, and was probably dreaming the good times over again.

Adam Clark preached at Barnard last Sunday, but the rain prevented a large attendance.

Willard Olney is sick with sore throat.

Levi Wells is recovering.

There is a commendable increase in sheep-raising in Norwood township.

Edwin Cook has bought a Holstein bull calf of J. S. & J. R. Dixon. Mr. Cook is a making considerable effort to introduce thoroughbred stock into the country, and his own herd shows much improvement. He has a good stock farm.

Notes of the Fair by an Observer.

The weather was very warm and consequently much discomfort was felt.

W. C. T. U. had a pleasant corner presided over by Mrs. H. P. Barbour who gracefully did the honors of the occasion.

The "baby show" was enjoyed by all with perhaps the exception of the "little darlings" who were nearly smothered in the crowd.

By the number of fleshy women present we predict, that a fat woman's premium would have been well received.

The exhibits from some townships was small, for the reason that at previous fairs, the premiums have not all been paid. We understand the society is out of debt and ahead this year, would it not be well for them to pay up past dues and then another year we predict a "fair" success. [Our correspondent evidently looks at the cash value of the premium as the measure of success. On that basis nearly all county fairs would be failures. The fact that a premium was awarded should be greater satisfaction than the actual cash value of the premium.—ED. JOURNAL.]

We will now enter our protest (notwithstanding it is useless) against the horse racing as seen at our agricultural fair. Instead of being actual trials of speed, they are scenes of profanity, cruelty to the noblest of animals, and are conducted on principles that cause many to condemn it as a fraud. Why will not our newer counties learn expediency from those in the older portion of the state, and observe that where horse-racing is prominent other exhibits deteriorate for the reason that too much time and money is spent on that part of the exhibits, in proportion to the actual value received by our citizens. We have not spoken of the attendant evils, gambling, etc. which are not new to your readers, the greatest good to the greatest number should be our motto.

We are glad to note the improvements in the school grounds of district No. 3. Nowland Bros. had the job of plowing and seeding. Now fencing is next in order to make it homelike.

Wm. Saunders and Charles Knapp were each presented with sons by their respective wives last week. The baby crop is very good this year.

Geo. Preble Sundayed at Mr. Somerville's in Echo, and Wm. Preble went to Central Lake where Mrs. P. is stopping with her parents.

As Wm. Wing took his relatives to the train on Wednesday evening, while seeing them off safely, his horses—insecurely tied—took a tour of inspection on their own account; when found, they had run against a building and the wagon had gone through the wall. "Sweet William" was shaking with fright and "Geranium" wasn't much better. N. B.—Will has euphonious names for his horses.

After a bountiful supper which was served on the lawn, A. E. Martin took a photograph view of the house and company, and after a good visit the party dispersed, satisfied that the afternoon had been well spent.

E. Martin, Boyne City, Michigan, on Tuesday Sept. 24th, 1889. Should the frost in the meantime kill the succotash, still we desire your attendance, —it wont kill the chickens.

☞ Bill Snort.

Ironton.

The Ironton school commenced Monday.

The school house in Mountain district is being painted and otherwise repaired this week and school will begin next Monday. Miss Mary Johnson has been reengaged for the winter, this being her 4th term here.

The funeral of Mrs. James Reed was held at her late home last Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock. There was a large attendance. Leroy Sheldon preached the funeral sermon.

Little Anna Gilbraith has been very sick but is recovering.

Another serious accident occurred at Ironton Saturday morning by which John Stewart nearly lost his life. He was working on the tram when a car ran away knocking him off the tram and injuring him so severely that it was thought at first that he could not live, but we hear that he is recovering under Dr. Carlstein's care.

When Ironton undertakes to win she generally does it, even at a baby show. Will Robinson's baby, little Myrtle, carried off the first prize at the fair last week.

Ironton had a pretty big blaze last Thursday morning at 3 o'clock. The Lake View House burned with nearly all its contents. Some of the furniture was saved from the house. The fire caught in the kitchen some way and was so well under way when discovered that it could not be stopped. Mr. Munson's people lost nearly all of their clothing as did most of their boarders, one man $200 in cash. The building was insured for $3,000 and the furniture $500.

FIRE!

The Charlevoix Mfg. Co.'s Planing Mill a Total Wreck.

About three o'clock this morning the planing mill, offices, and a large amount of material of the Charlevoix Manufacturing Co. were burned. The origin of the fire is not known, but is believed to have been incendiary. When discovered, the flames had a good start in the northwest corner. The wind was blowing a gale from the northwest, and before the fire department could get water, the building was a total wreck, including all the machinery, stock, and lumber in the mill. The fire soon communicated to the offices, and to Hogan's residence on the west, and they, too, were soon wiped out.

The loss of the company will reach $20,000, with but $3,500 insurance. One company carrying $1,000 had withdrawn their risk only last week, and the amount had not yet been replaced in another company.

Isaac and John Hogan saved their furniture. Their house was valued at about $500, with no insurance.

Only the excessive moisture from recent rains saved the adjoining property of Pat O'Neill and G. C. Geiken and the property of O. D. Wood and the Bennett estate across the street. The latter were in especial danger, as fire-brands larger than a man's hand frequently fell upon the roofs of the buildings.

This is a most disastrous blow to the industries and building interests of Charlevoix, as in all probability the company will not rebuild this fall, if at all.

CATARRH.—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that the germs are in the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges positive to 6 weeks (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet containing this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 1002 G

Happy Roosters.

Wm. Timmons, postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town, says: "Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. Only 50c. a bottle, at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. He strongly suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from first dose. She continued its use and after taking ten bottles, found herself sound and well, now does her own housework and is as well as she ever was. —Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store; large bottles 50c. and $100.

THE Cadillac Democrat makes a great ado because Geo. P. Sanford chooses to call his new paper at Lansing "The Stat. Democrat." "The State Democrat" in one style of type on a four-page paper published at Lansing, cannot possible be confounded with "Michigan State Democrat" in another style of type on an eight-page paper published at Cadillac. The latter's claim of piracy of name is ridiculous. As well might the National Democrat of Cassopolis charge piracy against the National Democrat recently started at Washington D. C.

Twelve of our business men were deceived into an advertising scheme by a man hailing from Detroit, Wednesday. He had a sheet about the size of a sixteenth sheet. On one side was the twelve cards of the business men, on the opposite side was a discount table, telling each customer that if they would call on certain days that they would receive certain discounts. He was to furnish each merchant taking a card with 500, or 6,000, charging each one $6, or $72 for the lot. The job was a "cheesey" looking thing, printed on manilla paper. He represented that the form was copyrighted, and the home paper could not do the job. There is not an office in the state but what would be pleased to do the job for $20, and take all risks of the copyright. We advise our merchants to back out of the scheme before it is to late, and we warn our brethren in the state to look out for him.—Caro Democrat.

Disappointed Picnicers.

Tuesday morning opened with a cold, disagreeable rain, and the Odd Fellows and Congregational Sunday school who had planned for a basket picnic at Horton's Bay on that day were thoroughly discouraged. Although the picnic was declared off, about thirty Odd Fellows from Charlevoix and Petoskey had made an early start, and decided to come on at least as far as Charlevoix, and they were entertained at the hall of Round Lake lodge. A table was spread and the contents of the dinner baskets enjoyed, after which the offer of Dr. Lewis of the free use of the opera house for dancing was accepted. The committee of Round Lake lodge planned for a carriage ride about the city, but the rain prevented. A number of gentlemen went to the new school house, and expressed surprise at the complete arrangements and degree of finish. It has been estimated that if the day had been pleasant there would have been several hundred in attendance at Horton's Bay.

Railroad Notes.

In an interview this morning with Mr. J. B. Mulliken, vice president and general manager of the C. & W. M., the Herald was authorized to say that it is the intention of the company to push on north from Traverse City, and the preliminary survey is now being made. The surveying party is several miles from town today. The main line of the extension from this place will run east of the chain of inland lakes in Antrim county, and a branch will be run into Elk Rapids. Petoskey via Charlevoix is the objective point. Mr. Mulliken informs us that the work is being pushed south of this place with a large force of men and that they will be laying the steel here inside of three or four weeks.—Traverse Herald.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL FAIR.

A Large Attendance and Increasing Interest in Stock-Raising Manifested.

Reported for the JOURNAL.

Better weather could not have been asked for the fair this year. If anything it was a little too warm, but this did not prevent there being more visitors in attendance this year than there has been any year previous.

The exhibits in every department except the fruit and vegetable, were more complete than ever before. The fair should have been held about a month later in order to show our Northern Michigan crops to their best advantage.

In the vegetable department W. S. Stripp led with the largest collection. He exhibited three varieties of corn, four varieties beets, two of carrots, and samples of cabbage, cucumbers, parsnips, turnip-beets, and sun-flower heads, all very fine specimens.

M. J. Staley, of Eveline, showed some fine samples of citrons, squash, turnips, carrots, cucumbers and onions. He also had the largest exhibit of plums, including the following varieties: Red Egg, Washington, Green Gage, Blue Damson, and Lombard.

M. M. Burnham, of East Jordan, had a good selection of grain and vegetables, including seven varieties of corn, two varieties of potatoes, three pumpkins, and a half-peck of buckwheat. He also exhibited some nice looking butter.

Robert Trimble had the largest exhibit of apples and pears. His exhibit was a selection from most of the farms in Norwood, and speaks well for the farmers of that township.

Geo. Anderson, of Marion, exhibited four varieties of very fine apples.

Mr. Hackett, of Echo, exhibited a plate of fine large Yellow Egg plums which were said to be equal to anything that California can raise. He also had pears and apples.

W. H. Jackway exhibited two varieties of potatoes, three of apples, and one each of squash, turnip beets, and cucumbers.

L. S. Benham, Jordan, exhibited three samples of very fine extracted honey.

The poultry exhibit will compare favorably with last year. Campbell & Maus were the principal ehibitors, showing fourteen coops of fowls, one of ducks and one of pigeons. L. S. Benham had the best show of Pekin ducks.

The mercantile exhibit was not so large this year as in previous years, but still enough to be creditable.

The first to be seen as you enter floral hall was the exhibit of the Rifenbury Milling Company, with a selection of their different brands of flour and feed arranged for effective display. Above the exhibit was a show case with the cigar exhibit of Kirbey & Guard.

Mrs. Litney & Carr, the Charlevoix milliners had a very tasty exhibit of millinery goods, the most attractive in the hall.

D. C. Loveday, hardware dealer, had a show case of cutlery and exhibit of stoves.

C. O. Lewis comes next with an exhibit of furniture.

H. L. Page had a number of stoves and articles usually kept in a hardware store.

F. E. Bossinger made an exhibit of gents' furnishing goods, including flannel shirts and neckwear, all tastefully arranged.

H. W. King exhibited a selection of groceries and woodenware.

C. H. Whittington had a well-displayed exhibit of undertakers' goods, furniture, and wall-paper.

The East Jordan Lumber Co. had samples of their general line of dry goods and boots and shoes.

Harry Branch had a show case of elegant plush goods.

The stock exhibit is better and more complete this year than ever before. The county is importing blooded stock every year, and the consequence is a higher grade of farm animals. Every stall in this department had an occupant.

Ingalls, of East Jordan, exhibited a three-year-old Holstein bull weight 2,030 pounds.

James H. Stone had a very fine Holstein bull on exhibition, whose weight was 2,230 pounds.

S. M. Richardson exhibited a fine yearling Jersey bull.

A short-horn Durham bull, 6 months old, weight 600 pounds, is said to be the largest bull of that age in the county. He is owned by David Willis, of Advance.

B. C. Lane, of Eveline, exhibited a fine full blood two year-old short-horn Durham bull. Also a grade short horn bull calf.

Henry Nugent, of Advance had the best yoke of mooley steers. They were well-matched four-year olds.

There were also exhibited several good grade calves sired by the Holstein bulls on exhibition.

B. C. Lane exhibited a full-blooded Berkshire boar, and a Berkshire sow with three pigs.

J. A. Lawrence exhibited three good Poland China pigs.

M. M. Burnham exhibited a pen of Shropshire sheep and lambs and was awarded three premiums.

H. Bacon showed a good three-year old grade ram.

There were five other entries of sheep, all good looking animals.

The stallion "Brilliant" exhibited by B. W. Miller, of Charlevoix.

Henry Nowland, of Eveline had a fine driving mare with foal.

Wm. Knight, of Atwood, exhibited a well built two year-old iron grey mare, and a three-year old stallion.

John Newman, of Clarion, exhibited the stallion "Brilliant."

George Smith, of Norwood, exhibited his fine bay stallion.

M. M. Burnham had on exhibition a black two-year-old stallion weighing 1360 pounds. A very good horse.

We also noticed a fine-looking team of greys but did not learn the name of the exhibitors.

S. M. Richardson had two good-looking colts, one four months old and the other six months old.

W. S. Stripp had on exhibition a carriage mare, a one-year-old stallion, a stallion colt under six months, and a pair of two-year-old general purpose filleys. He sold the latter team to S. Parker for $250.

There were some paintings, crayon, and charcoal sketches that were very good, among which were a charcoal sketch by Rose Harbour; two crayon sketches by W. L. Loveday (1860), and five oil paintings by Mrs. Henry Warner.

Miss Maud Loveday exhibited some dried specimens of Rocky Mountain flowers.

The East Jordan Lumber Company showed a nice cherry picture frame and a fine wooden bracket shelf, the work of E. S. Hawkes.

Mrs. Henry Warner also exhibited an elegant painted lambrequin.

Prof. Walrond exhibited a family record, a specimen of his penmanship.

At the baby show the prize was awarded to Myrtle Robinson of Ironton, and John Hanley's baby of East Jordan, the judges deciding that both were entitled to first prize.

There was a very good exhibit of ladies' fancy needle work, embroidery, etc.

The flower exhibit was small, Meech & Son making the only entry with a few choice specimens of cut flowers.

Wade & Chase of Bay Springs exhibited brooms.

The trotting and chariot races on Thursday and Friday afternoons interested most of the people on the ground. The chariot races were a decided novelty.

At the election on Friday the old officers were re-elected, as follows:

President—Wm. Howe, Boyne Falls.
Secretary—J. S. Stone, East Jordan.
Treasurer—J. R. Dixon, East Jordan.
Directors for three years—David Lane, J. L. Campbell, M. Hoskins, and H. Rowland.

MAMMY'S STORY.

Ah, well do I recall how, in the happy olden days,
I sat beside the nursery fire and saw the hickory blaze;
While I heard the wind without, and the splash-ing of the rain,
And the broad mandolins tapping at the dripping window pane,
When mammy, rocking slowly, with the baby on her knee,
Told many a wonderous story—"Jan' as true as tree could be!"

"Well, once dere was two leetle boys, Jeems and Johnny Wood;
An' Jeems was bad as bad could be—an' Johnny he was good.
Dey ma, she had a bag o' gold hid in de cubby hole—
An' Jeems he found it out, an' all dat heap o' money stole!
An' den he ran away to far' he kin' a rubber shoe,
An' he' his ma an' te'w' so poo', dey dunno what to do!

"Well, Johnny, for his poo' mamma, he wucked de bes' he could,
Till she sent him to de swamp to chop some wood;
An' dar he lot o' 'gators come—er free, er fo', er five!
An' de biggest gobbled Johnny up, an' swoll-owed him alive!
An' dar, inside de critter's maw, what did he be hot?
But de older boy rubber shoe, and his mudder's bag o' gold!

"Well—den he tuck his leetle ax, an' right away he flew
Tel he clomp a mom'ous hole right frough the 'gators wood;
Den out he pop an' neb'er stop tel he reach his mudder's do'
An' he poured de shinin' money dar, right on de parlor flo'!
Now, honey! 'member dis, from de tale you jes heerd tell—
De bad, dey allus comes to bad—an' de good, dey gits de gol'!"
—Susan Archard Wales in St. Nicholas.

AN ANGEL UNAWARES.

"Mother, must I do it?" The sweet voice that spoke these words was very pathetic, and the lovely child face was clouded with an expression of fear. Her listener sighed sorrowfully.

"My darling you know why I ask you to be brave."

The little girl cast an expressive glance at a closed door adjoining the sunny room in which the conversation took place, and said with evident effort:

"Yes, I know why, and I will try to be good and not to mind so much for father's sake."

Perhaps a few of the playgoers who frequented the pretty little "Sothern" theatre missed the handsome jeune premier, who for a few weeks had been lucky enough to be engaged there in a popular comedy, but probably they would have been little affected by the news that owing to an accident, he was ever unable to act by the irony of fate, just when, after years of patient work in the provinces, he seemed likely to obtain his share of recognition and success his undoubted talent deserved.

Jack Hesseltine had always had an irrepressible love for the stage. He was a gentleman by birth and education, and when his elder brother died, leaving him alone in the world with very slender means, it was natural enough that he should follow his own bent. It must be owned that he was imprudent, for he married very young, and married a girl that had lost her heart to him at a country theatre, and who was disowned by her family in consequence. She had neither talent nor inclination for her husband's vocation, which was fortunate, as he had no desire for his wife to act, but she was a charming woman, able to make their poor home a happy one, and he never gave her cause to regret the union for which she had sacrificed so much.

Their only child Sybil was now 4 years old, and a beauty so rare and delicate as to cause the eternal admiration of all and the most obdurate creditors to soften when they saw her. She was literally the idol of both parents, and when the first welcome gleams of success came, their first thought was that they would be able to give their one treasure a good education and a permanent home. For a few months things had looked very bright, and then, just at the end of the season, Jack had a fall and dislocated his knee. It proved to be a long, troublesome business, and it was, of course, impossible to keep to an engagement. As bad luck would have it, the "Sothern" was changing hands, and the manager, to whom he owed much kindness, had gone to America.

It had been a hot summer, but the Hesseltines had been obliged to give up their pretty little house in St. John's Wood, and to go into inexpensive lodgings. They would have been better off in the country, but Jack was so sanguine of a speedy recovery, and so fearful of having to return to the old drudgery if he once left London, that he insisted upon remaining there. Nothing seemed to hurt Sybil, who for all her fairness was very healthy. She made friends everywhere, and attracted a good deal of kindly attention.

One day, as Mrs. Hesseltine sat sewing and thinking sadly of unpaid bills and a cloudy future, she was interrupted by the entrance of an untidy servant, who announced with manifest awe: "Miss Desanges and Mr. Melton." Everybody knew beautiful Viola Desanges, with her stormy life history and her brilliant dramatic gifts. Amy Hesseltine had often admired her upon the stage, and rose to receive her magnificently attired visitor, a little conscious of her own poor dress and of the shabby room.

Miss Desanges saw in a moment that she had to deal with a lady, and said with her own special winning sweetness of manner: "I hope you will forgive what seems like an intrusion when I explain its cause. But before I do this, may I introduce to you Mr. Melton, the author of 'Passion Flowers,' the forthcoming new play at the Terpsichore? It was to have been brought out in three weeks, but a very serious obstacle has occurred, likely to delay its production. A most important part was to have been taken by a small piece of mimo, who is well known for her cleverness, but unfortunately she has caught scarlet fever. I was really in despair until quite by chance I saw your lovely little Sybil, and felt immediately that here was my very ideal. I saw Mr. Hesseltine in 'Fate,' and feel sure that his daughter is sure to have talent. If she proves as satisfactory as I imagine, I would gladly pay her well, for I am my own manager at present."

Amy turned pale. "Neither my husband nor I ever intended Sybil for the stage, Miss Desanges. I am not an actress, but I know quite enough of the life behind the scenes to wish to keep my little girl away from the footlights. If you can spare a few minutes I will go to my husband, but I am almost sure that his opinion will coincide with my own strong feeling in the matter. I hope he will be able to come in and see you himself."

While they sat waiting the young author, who had thin, marked features and melancholy eyes, took up a framed photograph from the table. Viola Desanges leant over his chair and looked at it intently, with a soft expression stealing over her beautiful, weary face. "It is like a dream to me to think that my play will soon be brought out with you as its heroine," said Horace Melton, after a pause. "Take all poets, I have my queer fancies, and I cannot help thinking that such a child as this must bring good fortune with her. She is like one of the visions of the old masters of the angels watching round the Holy Child."

Miss Desanges sighed. There was something odd and unworldly about this young man. He had a strange way of speaking his thoughts aloud that fascinated her by its simplicity. She felt that he at least believed her to be a good woman, and his faith in her was more precious than the incense poured at her feet by a host of adorers, to all of whom she was equally cold. But deep in her heart there was one overmastering love burning like a fierce flame, and she felt that, bound in honor as she was to a man whom she had married in despite, if he who had inspired this strong passion pleaded he would not plead in vain. All these thoughts flitted through her brain as she sat there. Simple and poor, as were all her surroundings, she knew intuitively that she was in a happy home, contrasting Amy Hesseltine's lot curiously with her own splendid misery.

Meanwhile, in the next room, Amy was hurriedly explaining to her husband what had happened. At first his negative was as emphatic as her own, but she could see that his fatherly pride was much gratified by the visit of the great actress. "If you will give me my crutches I will go in and see Miss Desanges myself," and in spite of his crutches Jack looked so handsome when he made his appearance that he inspired both visitors with very sincere pity. Miss Desanges plunged into business at once, exercising all her powers of persuasion, until at last the parents yielded.

It was not any love of art that made them consent, poor things. Jack had no wish to see Sybil on the stage, but there was the hunting consciousness of debts that were too honest not to desire to pay, and the fear of still more grinding poverty in the near future. Miss Desanges was simply delighted when she had gained her point; she was so rich that she could well afford to be generous, but the terms she offered were far higher than she had at first intended.

"Perhaps Mrs. Hesseltine, you would kindly bring her down to meet the theatre to-morrow, at about 10 o'clock, just to try her. I am not afraid. Good-by. Mr. Hesseltine; you will and we must see if we cannot find you a place in our company. They say Mr. Vaufield is to be married in a few weeks, and if this is true he will retire and leave a vacancy. You have done me a real service, and I shall not soon forget it."

It took Mrs. Hesseltine a long while to explain all this to Sybil, although, nice most only children, she was older than her years. Sybil was quite familiar with theatres, and had often seen her father act, but she had her own quaint ideas upon the subject, and sometimes talked about the cruel weight she clapped and laughed at raps when he was well, and forgot him when he was ill and suffering. She adored her father, and when she once grasped the idea that if she were a good girl and did what she was told she would have money enough to buy him all sorts of nice things, she consented to try. Her little heart almost failed her when she was taken to the theatre, but she was quick and clever, and learned the few words of her part so rapidly that Miss Desanges was more than satisfied.

It gave Amy Hesseltine a thrill to hear the clear little voice as she stood half hidden in the wings. She let her veil fall over her face, as she silently prayed for her darling—prayers that might be kept pure and spotless and learn no evil in this strange, new atmosphere. Nothing bit or bee her mother ever guessed how strange an influence was exercised by the new child member of the company. Men and women alike felt better for her innocent presence; the very scene shifters loved her, and Viola Desanges, who had never known the magic touch of baby fingers, acted the scene with Sybil as she had never acted before.

It was patheticenough in all truth. A beautiful, imaginative woman, with a silent reserved husband she fancies indifferent, has in a weak moment consented to leave her home with a rich artist. His specious arguments convince her, and at last at a ball at her own house she gives her promise. She goes upstairs to put on a cloak and then cannot resist going to the room where her child is lying asleep. All is dark save for the lamp held in the hand of the mother, who kneels by the cot weeping passionately and half regretting her rash impulse. The child sleeps calmly, as she pours out a fitful prayer for forgiveness, but wakes when the hot tears fall upon her cheeks.

"Why are you crying so, darling mamma! And are you going away that you have your cloak on?"

"Hush, baby, it is still night, but I have got to go away on a long journey."

Nothing prettier than Sybil was surely ever seen on any stage when she sat up in her crib with her golden curls all ruffled.

"Mamma, darling mamma, don't go away and leave papa and me. Oh! take us with you; we cannot be left alone, we love you so dearly."

As she said this she clung round the neck of the mother who was going to forsake her, and the victory was won. The curtain fell as Viola Desanges threw off her heavy traveling cloak, and sat down holding the little child in her own.

"Go to sleep, my baby; I will stay and take care of you always."

Then the husband, who has been an unseen witness, comes forward with his full forgiveness, and all ends happily.

Wiseacres expressed doubts as to the success of "Passion Flowers." It was too simple, too poetical, too somber; in fact, there was no end to the charges brought against it, and Horace Melton sometimes deponded. Not so Miss Desanges.

"I tell you I am sure of the verdict," she said to him again and again. "I have never had a part I like so well. As to Sybil, she is unique; that utter simplicity and that face must take the audience by storm. I know audiences as well."

It was a gray, chilly October evening, and a tall, distinguished looking man was sitting alone in a luxurious room in Piccadilly writing rapidly. He was pale and agitated, and his hand trembled as he wrote. Hugh Errington was rich, free and gifted, yet he was most unhappy. The only son of good parents, he had been a good man in spite of all temptations.

But then he had never known the real force of temptation until he discovered that the passion against which he had silently battled for years was returned. He could scarcely remember the time when he had not loved Viola Desanges, but he was a man of honor, and he knew that she was married. Latterly she had been more miserable than usual, and then one memorable night each had guessed the secret of the other, and the knowledge had brought a bitter sweet rapture that was more like a mockery of happiness. Viola was the stronger now, since a little golden haired baby had taught her sweet lessons of patience and forgiveness. She was learning to be brave in her resignation, but Hugh Errington had grown harder and more reckless since he knew the truth, and now, on the first night of "Passion Flowers"—delicious night—he was forgetting honor, forgetting pride, and forsaking the right path. In his hand he now held the scrap of letter that implored Viola Desanges to leave London, to leave the world with him. A bouquet lay beside him, and he carefully fastened the note among the roses which concealed it. Half an hour later he was with two or three other men in a small high box at the Parthenon. It all seemed like a confused, jubilee dream. He bowed and smiled to his acquaintances, and talked aloud acutely to those who were with him. This time to-morrow his place would be vacant, his story the talk of the town, and honest men would have no part or lot with him. The play succeeded, and as Viola Desanges had foreseen, it was received with growing favor. The critics agreed that she had surpassed herself, and even Hugh Errington was conscious of an irreproachable change in her.

Little Sybil's entrance roused him from a reverie, and he followed her every movement with fixed attention. She brought back to his remembrance a picture that had hung over his bed in the old hall when he was a boy, the picture of a child angel with a white lily in its hand. He remembered how he liked to fancy it a guardian spirit when he fell asleep at night. What had such thoughts of purity to do with the present? He had chosen; it was too late. No, not yet too late. The flowers lay beside him; Viola was on the stage; they were safe from him; the barrier was not broken, as it should be broken before another day dawned. He did not follow the action of the play very closely, but its construction was simple. Was it merely a coincidence that it seemed to have been written especially for him? You may you will give me everything heart can desire, but, Godfrey, if I go away with you, you can never give me back a woman's greatest treasure, my good name. Will, what thrilling expression Viola Desanges spoke these words, and what a depth of meaning lay in her great wistful eyes!

There was not a sound in the theatre. The great actress had seized on an uninagined height of power, and the audience was riveted. And the child! When the flushed face on the pillow was revealed by the lamp there was a moisture in the eyes of many but little used to feel emotions such as these, and real tears fell on Sybil's cheeks as Viola Desanges leant over her, forgetting the artist in the woman.

And Hugh Errington! Surely the guardian spirit of his boyish dreams stood before him in the guise of little Sybil. Silently, earnestly, the great battle between good and evil was being waged. His friends had left him, and he had no witness save his God, the bouquet and tore to fragments the note that had lain like a serpent among the blossoms.

He would leave England, but he would leave it alone. He would not tempt a living woman to sin for his sake; he would begin a new life, and should be higher and purer than the old. The curtain fell amid frantic applause. The actors were coming, and for a moment Viola Desanges stood before them with Sybil beside her. The smile of triumph upon her face made it more beautiful than ever, but to the man who watched her for the last time it had an added sweetness, as he looked at her and flung the bouquet of roses at the feet of the child who had saved him and come to them both like an angel unawares.—Roland Grey in The Stage.

"I would like to ask you a question," said a gentleman to a fellow who was spreading himself over four seats in a crowded railway car. "What is it?" "What brand of nerve food do you use?"—Epoch.

Hugging the Fetters of Trade.

The Bulletin of the Iron and Steel Association dolefully insists that there can be no partial free trade, and that if the duties on raw material should be reduced or repealed the whole fabric of protection must thereafter come tumbling down.

Our esteemed contemporary should allay its fears. Such benefits grow from unfettered trade that—while a great deal of it is best—even a little of it is very good. Untaxed hides have, in seventeen years, lifted the leather business out of a condition of stagnation into robust and aggressive prosperity. Untaxed quinine has delivered us from protected agues. Untaxed raw silk has established our silk industry on a solid footing. Untaxed iron ore, coal, coke, and wool, with compensating and equivalent reductions in the woolen and iron and steel schedules, would revive those failing industries east of the Alleghany Mountains.

Partial free trade, at least to the extent enjoyed by foreign manufacturers who by reason of it are enabled to sell their wares in spite of us under our very noses, is precisely the thing we need. It has the endorsement of three successive republican administrations; and no matter what impediments may be temporarily thrust in its way, brethren, it is surely coming.—Philadelphia Record.

Pennsylvania's Democracy.

There is no uncertain sound to the democracy in Pennsylvania. The platform on which the democrats have planted themselves in the state fight is a clear clean out reform platform. It is a hopeful sign when Pennsylvania makes firm her left argy. When the pauper state of the Union determines to beg no longer. No usurpation or centralization of power in the federal government; no taxation for surplus; no tariff for bounties; no trusts; tax reduction through tariff reform; no infringement of personal liberty; no discrimination against labor in legislation or administration; no misuse of public funds; ballot reform in the interest of free and pure elections—these are the demands of the Pennsylvania democrats—Manistee Democrat.

Whiskey Did It.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Owen Heffernan, hod carrier, his wife and 13-year-old daughter, Mary Jane, got drunk yesterday, Heffernan assaulted his wife. The daughter interfered. Then Heffernan threw his daughter down in front of the stove, and, holding her by the hair, poured a kettle of boiling water over her body. The mother looked on stupidly. Heffernan was arrested. The girl may die.

The Republican Platform Revised.

The republican platform is short if not sweet—it has spice to it if not wit. Here it is: "The dishonorable discharge of a soldier from the service of the United States is no bar to a pension." Those are the words of assistant Secretary Bussey. Is this right?—Manistee Democrat.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Inwood.

SEPT. 25.—It rained nearly all last week, and hindered the threshing.

The Vanorman family have entirely recovered from diphtheria, thanks to the care and treatment of Dr. Lewis of Norwood. Nine members of the family were afflicted, and but one died,—the first case, which the doctor did not see until past help. The people of that neighborhood feel very grateful toward the doctor for his careful and skillful treatment of this terrible disease.

Mr. Lord sold his horse team to Mr. Withers last Saturday.

Chas. See expects to move his family to Smithson's camp for the winter.

M. and W. Olney have a job of getting out cedar for Nash this winter.

Mr. Prosser has a patent door stop which he is introducing in this vicinity.

Town board meets Oct. 5th.

Henry Hilton has gone to MacDermott's to take a job of getting out wood.

Joseph Holichiek and Miss Lizzie Wheaton were married at Norwood last week, and will occupy the Nick Shores house.

Melvin Wheaton's baby died last Friday.

Max Genett has bought the Lucia farm, and is happy.

W. J. McGeagh lost 2,000 feet of basswood at the Charlevoix fire. It was put into the dry-kiln the day before the fire.

A great many Norwood cattle are being sold in Petoskey market. [What is the matter with the Charlevoix market?—ED. JOURNAL.]

Up to this date (Sept. 25) there has not been any frost in Norwood to do any damage. Who can show a better record.

Norwood farmers are setting out a great number of fruit trees. This will be a great fruit town in a few years.

Wm. Pearl has moved from Charlevoix back to his farm here.

Joe Shores will move to Smithson's camp for the winter.

Inwood residents listened to Adam Clark's discourse at Barnard school house last Sunday.

O. D. Hilton has plum trees planted one year ago last spring bearing fruit this year.

The rain last week injured the millet.

Mrs. Pearl, of Battle Creek, has been visiting her sons W. F. and L. H. Pearl, and daughter Mrs. McIntire, in Norwood the past week.

Mrs. Stinson of Smithson's camp, is suffering with a cancer. Her old age makes the case serious.

Nassau Burns has moved back to the camp.

A son of Jacob Vandeusen is attending school at Charlevoix.

Wilson.

Lovely autumn weather.

Another frost on Saturday night, killed some garden stuff on the low lands.

Mill started up last week and had a few days run.

Mrs. Irving Willis and son, are in Clam Lake visiting relatives for a few days.

Thos. Shepherd sr., had a bad spell—similar to those he is subject to—on Sunday morning. He is better at present.

Miss Sarah Jones, of Boyne City, but formerly teacher here, is a guest of Mrs. Hudkins for a few days.

Will Holland (not Nowland) and wife returned home to Torch Lake, accompanied by Edward and Miss Hattie.

Miss Nowland, of Boyne Falls, is stopping at her uncle Albert's for a few weeks.

Edward Nowland moved his residence from his brother's place to his own place across the road on Monday.

We hope a goodly number of correspondents and last but not least, editor Strang, will except Mr. Boyne City's invitation to eat succotash with him.

Ed. J. Wakely of Echo, who is always welcome among us, preached on Saturday evening and Sunday morning at Afton; and was cordially invited to come again to hold a few days meeting after a while.

On account of the continued rain last week, we were expecting a flood, but the bow of promise appeared in the sky showing by its beautiful presence that the world should not again be drowned.

Two "sun dogs" with a rainbow near the sun were seen the other day. Will some one with an astronomical turn of mind explain to us the reason and sign of the phenomena?

Ed. Scofield, according to the request of the W. C. T. U., preached on the subject of "Tobacco" on Sunday evening. The subject was well handled and gave convincing proof that no man has a right to defile himself with the vile weed.

Advance.

SEPT 24.—A slight frost Sunday morning, but as far as we have seen no damage has resulted therefrom.

The steam thresher has been through here, and farmers know about how much wealth they have accumulated this summer. Wheat was badly injured in some places by the midge and yielded from 12 to 17 bushels per acre. Oats also were injured by the midge and by the rust. Peas yielded well. Corn, in spite of the unfavorable weather during the early part of the season, is a good crop where the farmers did their duty by it.

Your correspondent has been tramping through the country some lately, and is surprised at seeing so large an amount of buckwheat. The crop is now being harvested. Some new buckwheat was brought to the mill last week to be ground. Taken altogether farmers have reasons to rejoice this year and every family should have a good fat turkey for Thanksgiving.

Wheat is being brought to Platen's mill in such large quanties that "Gruff" will probably have to work day and night in order to keep up.

Mr. and Mrs. Shryock have gone to Pennsylvania on a visit, to be gone all winter.

Geo. E. Rogers was delighted at receiving a visit from Fred Boughton, of Alba, an old acquaintance whom he had not seen for a number of years.

Why is it that newspaper correspondents are all such good-looking people? This question came in our mind the other day, when we saw the Advance correspondent of the Boyne Citizen.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

Miss Clara Estell died on Saturday night, at South Arm, after a brief illness. Aged 16.

Mrs. Dr. Willard, who was called away last week, returned home Tuesday after the death of her father.

It is with extreme regret we announce that Al F. Draper has withdrawn his interest from the firm across the lake, and intends departing for Chicago. Al is a brilliant and thorough business man, a good neighbor and a splendid citizen, and we hate to see him go. Take he has the best wishes of ourself and the rest of his friends for a successful future we need hardly say. Don't be in a hurry to leave us, Al; and when you do go don't forget the old spot.

The East Jordan ice crop is exhausted, and the supply for the remainder of the season must come from Charlevoix or elsewhere.

This morning, Thursday, Sept. 19th, at 11 o'clock, Fred. E. Boosinger and Miss Violet Ward were united in the holy bonds of matrimony at the home of the bride's parents, the Rev. E. G. Byrant officiating. Fred is one of the best known and most popular young business men of the village and together with his charming and equally esteemed bride receives the congratulations of the entire community. Long life, much happiness and prosperity is the wish of all. The young couple are now on their way south on their honeymoon trip.

School commences Oct. 1st, with Miss Adams for teacher.

Epoch.

The transition from long lingering and painful sickness to robust health marks an epoch in the life of the individual. Such a remarkable event is treasured in the memory and the agency whereby the good health has been attained is gratefully blessed. Hence it is that so much is heard in praise of Electric Bitters. So many feel they owe their restoration to health, to the use of the great alterative and tonic. If you are troubled with any disease of kidneys, liver or stomach, of long or short standing you will surely find relief by use of Electric Bitters. Sold at 50c. and $1 per bottle at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 3

A MAN OF THE WORLD.

He Is Always Ready to Assist a Brother in Distress.

I suppose I am one of the persons who come under the street phraseology of "a man of the world." I also suppose that phrase, in its best sense, means a man not wholly good or bad—a person known and distinguished from those whose pretentions lead them into exclusiveness—those who pretentiously consider themselves specially ushered into the world for a purpose. With this self sanctifying definition of my place in the social, economic, political and business world, I have closely observed the men of my class and all other classes as contradistinguished from my own.

I don't pretend to say that my conclusions warrant the assertion that we of the worldly class do more in our way to make the world better by reason of our presence, but I am conscientiously prepared to say our daily contributions to the needy will challenge favorable comparison. Men who have breasted the waves of every day life, who are deep within the current today and smiling the sunshine to-morrow, fail to develop a heart rich in all the impulses of human sympathy and benevolence. Now I'm with no intention to cast odious reflections upon a pretentious class by relating a recent incident.

A comparatively young man, of good family and having the advantages of a good education, but who was unfortunate to the extent of leaving the parental roof prematurely, and who failed behind the world at large, called upon a now wealthy and formerly intimate friend of his father's family for assistance. He was seedy and absolutely needed. He wanted to take his rags and all his valuable experience home again, freely admit his error and commence life anew. He was not only refused assistance, but even greatly relieved away. He returned to his old haunts and his men of the world associates disheartened, and related his sky's experience to a company of three or four, and with the result that they chipped in enough to send him to his old home, and they did not ask any note for the amount advanced, with usurious interest, either.

I received a check for the amount a few days ago, and it may not be inappropriate to state that his father has discontinued all business relations with the man to whom his son applied for assistance, which means the loss of several thousands a year.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Lobenstein's Error of Judgment.

A young man named Lobenstein fitted himself out to go in the ice cream business. He bought a wagon, freezers, etc., but needed a horse. John Connerton, who sells ice and ice cream occasionally, got wind of Lobenstein's venture, went to him and offered him his horse. "You can have the horse at your own price," said Mr. Connerton. "He is gentle and will do most anything."

The story hangs a tale. The horse could do most anything. It was a trick animal, trained by John Connerton.

Lobenstein took the horse, scorned to pay less than $10 for it, and started out peddling. His cheeks were aglow with business success, and he had a large barrel of cream in his wagon. Connerton followed him around at a convenient distance, and waited until the young man got opposite Connerton's residence, on A street, on the lower side of which place there is an embankment of about fifty feet. Then John gave a peculiar whistle from B street opposite. The horse pricked up his ears, kicked off the dashboard, and started down the embankment, with driver, wagon and all rolling after him. The cream was all spilled and the opposition swept from the face of the town. A crowd of children licked up the cream from the rocks.

Later in the day Lobenstein, leading his horse, was hunting for Connerton, to whom he disposed of the animal for $5.—Virginia City Enterprise.

Fifty-seven Guineas for a Pack of Cards.

Fifty-seven guineas is not a bad price for a pack of cards, and it was given by a dealer at a sale held in Birmingham. The pack is stated to be the only one of its kind in the world. Every card is specially engraved, and the pack comprises an exhaustive pictorial history of the principal events in the reign of Queen Anne down to 1706. They include the victories of Marlborough, the sea fights of Admiral Benbow, all the various changes connected with the parliamentary proceedings of the day, and the conclusion of the treaties between England and France and Spain. The queen of hearts is a very well drawn picture of Queen Anne herself, and the king of hearts represents Prince George of Denmark, her husband. The queen of diamonds is Annie Sophia, queen of Denmark; the queen of clubs is the princess royal of Prussia, and the queen of spades is the Princess Anne of Hessa. The knaves were represented by leading politicians of the day. This curious pack was the occasion of much spirited bidding between the gentlemen who held competitive views of the purchase, and they gone to these the local art gallery would have eventually revel then. As it is, their destination is Shropshire.—Hall Mall Gazette.

American Ingenuity.

"There is no way in which the country's prosperity is seen to better advantage," said Mr. Schuyler Duryea, chief clerk of the patent office, "than in studying the work of this office. Dating the last calendar year 350,000 applications were received on which first patent certificates were issued. It is difficult to imagine what the figures of these statistics will be fifty years from the present time, but the way in which new inventions suggest themselves and improvements, it doesn't look as if the day when the mind of man can conceive no more devices for adding to the world's comfort will ever be reached."—Washington Post.

F. D. Waldron, travelling agent of the Grand Rapids Daily Democrat was here a brief call this week, and added to the subscription list of his paper in the town. The Democrat is one of our most valued exchanges. It speaks right out on the tariff question, and its large circulation gives it a wide influence.

The Enterprise mentions the death of Miss Clara Estell, after a very brief illness. The report reaches Charlevoix that the cause was diphtheria, and that she was not properly cared for by those having charge of the interests of the public health. We hope the story is not true; but if true it is serious.

Returning from Boyne City Tuesday night, we were overtaken by the dark near Undine, and a "good Samaritan" in the person of Wm. Gray, furnished a lantern to light us home. Driving through the woods just beyond Mr. Grandy's it was so dark we could not see the white horse driving the buggy.

Capt. Tufts is sending abroad a good reputation for Charlevoix as a cooling station for steamboats. Martin Peterson, fireman on the Lou A. Cummings, had a narrow escape from death at Torch Lake yes terday. The creditors are unanimous in their praises of the generosity they fare pretty slim from present indications.

The railroad information obtained by Messrs. Turrell and Leavitt on their recent trip to Traverse City, is of a very encouraging nature. Mr. Turrell informs us that the surveying party on the projected line of the Chicago & West Michigan railroad were near Williamsburg, which fact alone, aside from the corroborative statement of general manager Mills, published in another column, is a sufficient guaranty of their present intention to run east of the inland lakes of Antrim county. Although the arrival of the surveying party is by no means a sure indication of a coming railroad, it is one of the first and necessary steps, and unless some unforeseen obstacle is encountered by the surveyors, it is believed they will reach Bellaire inside of two weeks. If the C. & W. M. and the D. C. & E. should cross each other at Bellaire, rival villages may call us a "cross roads town" as much as they please.—Bellaire Breeze.

If ever a newspaper deserved success for faithful work, the Chicago Daily News deserves it for its successful efforts to close the saloons of that city on Sunday. Every Monday morning the first page is full of good substantial arguments, not least among them being a large cartoon showing the evils of intemperance in its most startling realities. A cartoon is an object lesson that even a child can understand and appreciate, and with its more than a million daily readers, the Daily News must wield a most powerful influence for good. All lovers of home and quiet Sundays will say "God speed."

Scribner's Magazine for October contains an exciting exploration article, in which Joseph Thompson describes his remarkable and famous journey through equatorial Africa; a very practical paper on the best way to improve the common roads of the United States; an end paper by "Ik Marvel," the author of "Reveries of a Bachelor;" one of the most attractive electric articles, showing modern applications of electricity to war, on land and sea; the end of Stevenson's great romance, "The master of Ballantrae;" an unconventional travel article on Iceland; the second instalment of Harold Frederic's romance of Colonial New York; with other interesting fiction and poems. Most of these articles are richly illustrated.

Succotash.

The editor and wife, of the JOURNAL, on Tuesday accepted the invitation of the Boyne City correspondent to eat "succotash" and chicken pie at the residence of A. E. Martin at Boyne City. We found there the correspondents from Boyne City, Wilson, and Eveline, and although the rest of the "family" were not present, we managed to enjoy ourselves satisfactory for about three hours.

Mr. Martin the photographer under took to get a camera focused on the party, with what success we shall know later on.

Another year an effort will be made to have a meeting of all the correspondents of the JOURNAL earlier in the season, at some point more accessible by boats. (The plan for this meeting were all right, if the "Nellie" had not pulled off the Boyne City route so soon.) The time and place will be decided in time to give all correspondents a chance to prepare themselves, and a very enjoyable time can certainly be had.

Special School Meeting.

At the special school meeting last Friday evening the building committee presented their itemized report of the cost of the building, which was accepted and filed. The entire cost of the building, furnished ready for occupancy, including the grading of grounds and insurance, is $16,300. The district board were instructed to receive the final account and settle with the finance sub-committee of the building committee.

A 20-foot flag staff was ordered for the tower instead of a vane, and the committee were directed to see Mr. and Mrs. Byron See a twelve-foot bunting flag, with the understanding that it was to float every school-day while school is in session, until worn out.

The district authorized the employment of the seventh teacher.

A vote to reorganize the district and change to a union school was lost, not having the necessary two-thirds majority.

Sinking a Tug.

CATARRH.—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

SLIDERS AND ROLLERS.

Two Gifted Breeds of Horses Found Only in the Keuka Lake Region.

"To look at this horse coming here," said Maj. Gardiner, pointing to an ordinary, everyday looking bay horse that a man was driving toward the Fairchild house, "you wouldn't think he had any points out of the usual run of horses, but if you happened to be driving him and should come to a hill in the road, especially a steep hill, that horse would undoubtedly surprise you. He is one of a breed of horses that is known nowhere except along Keuka lake. The origin of the breed was queer. Down the lake about twelve miles is Bluff Point. It rises 800 feet high on the west shore, and is as steep as the roof of a house. There are farms on its summit and vineyards on its slopes. A man that owns a farm on top of the Point had a mare pasturing there years ago. She fed along the brow of the hill, and when she got to the very highest and steepest point she commenced to slide, and she kept on sliding, and she never stopped till she had slid feet first clear to the bottom of the hill and brought up on the edge of the lake.

"Folks that saw the mare shooting down that great escarpment like a falling star thought, of course, that when she stopped, if she ever did, she would be of no further service except as meat for cats or early bait for bullheads. But when her owner had worked his way down by an easier route and rowed up along the lake to the spot where he expected to shovel up the remains of the tobogganing mare, his surprise was greater than his joy, for he had tried to sell her for twenty shillings alive, and couldn't and had hoped to get twice that for her dead, and there she was, after her 800 foot slide, browsing on the overhanging bushes along the lake with appetite unimpaired and skin unbroken. The only thing her owner could do decently was to take her around the bottom of the hill and lead her back to her pasture.

"A few months after that the mare's owner found a colt at her side one morning, and a nice and lively one it was. The colt grew to be a horse that its owner was proud of, but the first time he drove him after breaking him to harness he noticed an extraordinary thing about him. The first hill he came to, which was a very steep one, the horse stuck his fore feet out and just slid to the bottom like a streak, and then went on like any ordinary horse. He repeated this at every hill. It was simply a hereditary slide, a prenatal impression from his mother's remarkable performance on Bluff Point. That slide was just the thing for the short, almost perpendicular hills that are a peculiar feature of the roads that run along Keuka lake. Teamsters dreaded to go down those hills with loads, for fore horses were sure footed enough to do it safely. The slide that this horse developed made the descent not only safe, but quick, if it could be reproduced in a strain of stock. It was, and the slider stock of horses had the call every time along Keuka lake for years, and advanced the interest of the region almost as much as a double track railroad.

"But an event happened a few years ago that ruined the strain. Bricout, the champion mare, up here in Hammondsport Glen, had an old one eyed mare that wasn't used much except for breeding purposes. She had the run of the Bricout place, and one day she strayed to the top of one side of the glen, and the first thing she knew she fell and went rolling over and over down the face of the glen, and kept on rolling until she came to a shelving rock 200 feet below where she stayed, and half way to the bottom of the glen. They got the old mare down from her perch by ropes and things, and there wasn't a spot on her that needed any salve or ointment. She was a cold sifter a time, and from the way he looked John thought he would be a credit to the slider stock, for his dam and his sire were way back sliders from the old hoss. But the first time he was driven he disappointed the community. When he came to his first hill—and it was a dandy—instead of doing a slick and thoroughbred slide, he simply tumbled over in the road and went rolling down the hill like a log on a rollway. Rolling horses were worse than useless, of course, and in spite of everything the slider stock got corrupted with the roller, and today you can't find a thoroughbred slider, except now and then an old one like the bay yonder. The stock is played out. But 200 feet down the face of a glen! That was a wonderful roll for a one eyed mare, even if it did break up a good strain of blood. Sad, sad."

"It was," said I. "I suppose if the mare had had two eyes she'd have rolled 400 feet."

"Sure!" said the major.—Hammondsport (N. Y.) Cor. New York Sun.

Degeneration in the Black Republic.

The situation of Hayti gives fresh point to the old saying that no people fit for freedom can be enslaved. In every material and in every moral respect it must now be freely admitted that Hayti is worse off than it was a hundred years ago, when the ancestors of the wretched negroes who now do nothing or worse were kept at work producing something of more value to mankind than they produce when left to themselves. Their enfranchisement was effected mainly by the spread of the ideas of the French revolution. Liberty, equality and fraternity were held to be the rights of the human species, without distinction of character or culture. The effect of applying these principles to Hayti has been the expulsion, except from the trading ports, where they are as much aliens as Europeans in Hong Kong—not only of all the men who could constrain the negroes to improve, but of all who could teach them to improve—and the stagnation has been rapid and complete, until, as we see, Hayti has little more vestiges of civilization left than if it were an unexplored part of equatorial Africa.—New York Times.

BOBBIE'S VERSES.

The children were learning their verses one day.
When he by her stepped in his hastest play,
Saying, "Ma too, mamma—teach me what to say.
For you know Bobbie did learn 'children obey.'"

"Please say it quick, mamma—I mean say it slow;"
Then standing quite still, with his face all aglow,
"Now see, I can say it, now Bobbie does know."
It is wonderfer the lifes, how they grow!"

"And the 'other one, mamma, what Jesus said
When children came to Him—they were not afraid;
When He put His kind hand on every one's head,
Like grandpa does when it is going to bed."

He climbed up, and sat himself down on my knee
"See now, Bobbie's a big boy." Bobbie is three;"
His sweet voice was grave, as he said reverent
"Suffer little children to come unto me."

When papa came home, the boys called, "Bobbie, hello!
Come quick, and tell papa the verses you know."
One minute he stopped, then began sweet and low,
"Consider the little children how they grow!"

—Virginia Dare.

THAT'S BILL'S GRAVE.

The train on the Santa Fe road, due an hour later at Peublo, stopped at a way station long enough for a solitary passenger to get on.

The person in question was a man past middle age, of medium stature, firmly and compactly built, who would have attracted a second look, however, but for the fact that his face was badly disfigured by a curious scar on his right cheek, in shape exactly resembling a Greek cross.

The newcomer found a seat beside me, threw up the sash and became absorbed in the scenery along the road, his interest increasing as the train presently swept along a pretty valley. Suddenly he jumped half way round, touched my arm, and, pointing through the open window, said very abruptly:

"Say, stranger, do you see that pile o' rocks yonder on the slope? Well, that's Bill's grave."

The man's actions and speech startled me a trifle, but I looked out and saw, as he had said, a pile of rocks on the green slope of the hill.

"Yes," continued the man, "that's Bill's grave. Twenty-five years ago I put them stuns thar myself. Poor Bill! pure gold e'ar through, an' I reck'n I orter know, for I know'd Bill from the ground up."

Having delivered this short speech the man lapsed into silence, with a far away, dreamy look, as if recalling events long past. But his words had aroused my curiosity, and, at the risk of interrupting the stranger's reverie, I finally ventured to ask: "Who was Bill, sir, whose grave is yonder?"

My companion gave a sudden start, then, recovering himself, he answered: "Didn't know Bill, air? Of course not, seein' he was dead before ye was born—dead twenty-five years come June. Bill was my pard, air, Bill was. A man to be to every time. Say, don't ye think you'd love a chap what 'ud be willin' fer dis for yer? Be willin', and would, an' did, too! I reck'n."

"Do you mean to say your chum died for you?" I asked, now thoroughly interested, for there was tremendous feeling and earnestness in the stranger's manner.

The man turned round, looked me squarely in the face, and in a solemn voice said:

"Stranger, he did."

"Would you mind telling me some thing about your friend?" I asked.

"I never git tired, sir, of talkin' about Bill," was the prompt reply. "Stopped hyur yesterday jest to see that grave. Put up one o' two o' the stones as hed rolled down. It's all right now.

"When I first met Bill he was guide for chaps across the plains, Santa Fe way, for thar wan't no railroads them days. A good guide 'n a trusty. Cur'ous though I seed him at times. He'd never use cuss words, nor drink, but I tell how he'd smoke, all day long 'n half the night, yer good natured, but the solemnest chap I ever struck. Strangy, I never knew Bill to git a laugh, never, not onceat. Told me his heart was broke 'n he couldn't laugh. What did he mean? Lor, man, I dunno, for he never said much about himself. Insisted kin his name 'n he said it was 'Bill.' I ask'd him wha' he was from 'n he said from 'Nowhar.' I spec thar was a woman in the case—thar mostly is. I notice. But Bill was built like a man 'n kept his mouth shut.

"Well, Bill an' me got ter be great chums an' I was mighty sorry when he quit pilotin' trains, an' jined some hunters, an' pulled out into the heart o' the Injun country.

"Reckey a year later, hain't got a bit easy on the subject o' silver mining, I struck this same region we are now passin' through but we had no luck at all in findin' silver, though I felt I hed struck it rich one fine day, when two hunters walked into our camp, one of 'em bein' my old friend Bill.

"Glad to see him, eh? Young man, ef ye'd seen ole Bill an' me a huggin' ye'd thought we was a couple o' bears for sure.

"Bill had been thereabouts for several months an' said there was no silver signs abouts, an' so our party pulled up an' went farther south, but I stayed with Bill an' tother chap to take a hand at trappin' beaver.

"The old fellow had a nice bit o' a hut nigh a quiet valley, where thar was heaps o' beaver, an' as thar was no redskins around we enjoyed ourselves immensely.

"But I didn't fancy Bill's companion, an' he didn't waste any love on me either. Bill had picked him up on the border jest for company, an' he took to him a bit because he seemed a nervy, brave fellow. He was a half breed Mexican, named Yumer, a small, yellow skinned, sallow cheeks, coal black eyes and a hatchet face, said cruel a way, too, I s'pose, first he showed his dislike for me plain enough, but by and by he became sullenly very friendly, which made it much pleasanter all round.

"One day I went up the creek to examine the traps, leaving Bill and Yumer mending some of the old ones at home. Having been gone about half an hour I was gettin' ready to return, when I heard the crack o' a rifle an' a bullet grazed the tip o' my ear, drawin' a drop o' blood.

"I reck'n I jumped nigh a rod high, for it was a pesty close call to climb the stairs, and then I looked to see whar the infernal thing come from. I seed a wisp o' smoke hangin' over a clump o' bushes nigh the hill top that did not see all I cared to know, an' grabbin' up my gun I made for home, an' durn the shelter of the creek bank, at a 2:40 gait, fearin' a second shot from the Injuns.

"Nigh our hut I met Yumer, gun in hand, who said he had heard the shot an' started out to help me if needed. It struck me as bein' cur'ous he could have heard the report over a mile away, behind the hill an' the wind blowin' half a gale in t'other direction, but o' course there wan't nothin' to be said.

"Bill was inside workin' on the traps, an' when I told him what had happened he was quite uneasy, and we discussed the stivation as to what should be done. Meantime Yumer had hung his gun on the pegs and gone for a bucket o' water.

"Wonder if Yumer seed any Injun signs when he was out,' said Bill. I was gone! Thought he was hyar with you.'

"'He went out with his gun soon after ye did,' said Bill. 'I'll ask him.' And Bill left the hut.

"That give me another suspicion, for I'am that Yumer had left the hut shortly after I did. What for? An' why did he pretend he'd heard the rifle shot an' come out afterwards to see what it meant? I got up an' went to the pegs an' examined the Mexican's rifle. I didn't like the result, for the gun wasn't loaded at all! Things had an' ugly look. While I was puttin' the gun back the Mexican returned, an seein' what I was doin' he look'd guilty as a thief an' then I know'd the rascal had fired that bullet at me himself.

"I wos on the p'int o' denounein' the villain to onceat an' I scarcely onderstand why I didn't. It was a drefful mistake not to do it, for mebbe if I had, matters would hev been diffrent, an' the awful thing what happened might never have come to pass. I have allus been sorry I didn't shoot the traitor on the spot. But I reasoned that bein' warned I could easily survumvent his divilitry. But he was worse than I give him credit for.

"I decided not to tell Bill about it, but when the next mornin' we disk'vered some o' our best traps gone an' the Mexican had vamoosed also, I up an' told pardner all about it; an' I think if Bill had been a severin' man the air 'ud a smelt o' brimstone sartin, for the old fellow was killin' mad e'ar through. We skirmished round all day, an' not an Injun sign could we see, which satisfied us that it was all the work o' that thievin' Mexican. We should miss the traps o' course, but so far as actual value was concerned, the scamp's share o' the pelts made that good, an' we was glad to be shut o' him. But we didn't onderstand what a reg'lar coyote the feller was, for a snake was a fool compared with him in genuine divilitry.

"Things went on smoothly enuff for about three weeks an' we were quite forgettin' the Mexican, when one day Bill went off to visit a creek sev'ral miles distant whar we had been thinkin' of setting a few traps, leavin' me at home, for I had been quite seedy several days with chills, which I never had sfore or sence.

"Wall, after Bill left I got a royal big fire in front of the hut, an', spreadin' it out, I lay down, the hot rays o' the sun feelin' very grateful to my chilled limbs, an' bimeby I went off sound asleep.

"After a while I woke up with a start, feelin' half smothered, an' found myself on the bare ground with the big b'ar skin on top entirely coverin' me up. I also heard voices an' felt that I was being held down by several men'r hands. I struggled as well as I could to throw off the b'ar skin, but found that I was really helpless, my feet bein' caught in the noose o' a stout lasso.

"Very soon, however, the skin was dragged off, and I saw several Injuns who fell upon me an' tied my hands in a jiffy, an' I found myself a fast prisoner in the clutches o' half a dozen redskins. But this wasn't as discouraging as it was to discover a man holdin' the end o' the lariat, in whom I recognized Yumer, the Mexican, who grinned at me in a most diabolical way that showed I need look for no mercy at his treacherous hands.

"'Caramba!' he growled. 'It is my turn now. You got Bill agin' me an' now I'll have my revenge.

"'What do you mean?' I demanded, furious with rage. 'Loosen my ropes, you coward, and I'll—'

"'Caraja!' interrupted Yumer, 'I'm not such a fool. Ye had a chance an' ye let it slip. Now you'll have what you got.'

"And with that the brute came up an' whippin' out his knife said: 'I'll just marky ye with a cross, so Satanas will give ye an extra hot roastin' when he gits ye down thar.'

"At the same time half breed gave me the mark ye see on my cheek, strange, an' laughed long an' loud, an' the Injuns danced a lively jig as he did it. Hurt! Wall, no doubt it did, an' bad some too, but I was so mad I didn't feel the pain till long afterward.

"Then the villains seized me, an' dragged me to the edge o' the precipice on which our hut stood, where it was 200 feet deep, the side bein' perpendicular an' as smooth as a bald man's pate, and tumbled me over.

"I fell about ten feet, an' was fetched up short by the lasso with a jerk that nearly twisted my ankles out o' plum. Then the Injuns began payin' out the rope, finally hitchin' the upper end to the stub o' the saplin' till I was left swingin' by the heels, head downwards, dangling in mid-air. My hands had got loose in the meantime, but it didn't help me a bit, for I couldn't double up to get hold o' the rope.

"It was a horrible situation, an' I think I should have died in a little while from rush of blood to the head, but before I could perfectly realize it in all its horrors I heard the sharp crack of a rifle not far away, an' then one o' the Injuns gave the most unearthly screech as I ever heard, an' I know'd thar was some sort of skirmidge goin' on above.

"The next minute some heavy object struck me on the feet, and was yet giddy, but sufficiently without knowin' edzactly what I was doin' I grabbed it with both hands an' held it fast.

"What d'ye think it was? Hang me, if it wasn't the Mexican hisself! In foolin' about the end o' the lariat he had slipped an' tumbled over the edge of the rock, an' d'had ketched the villain, an' was holdin' him by the leg, and thar we two was, I hitched to the lasso an' holdin' on to the rascal by the leg, an' both swingin' head downwards.

"Yell! You bet he did. I never heard sech shrecchin' as that skunk set up. A pack o' hungry coyotes wasn't a patchin' to it. What happened, did ye ask? Wall, see here, my friend, what under them circumstances 'ud be likely to happen?

"'Pears sort as if my fingers all to onceat got a kind o' cramp in 'em, an' was powerful weak, though such a thing never happened afore or sence, an' they doesn't look like women's fingers, do they?' and the speaker held up before me a pair of muscular hands, which he opened and shut in a way that suggested a grip of iron. Then he went on:

"As I was sayin', the cramps somehow got into my fingers at that evidentical moment, an' somehow or other, I never knowed exactly how it did happen—the Mexican slipped through my grasp, an' fetched up head first on the rocks a hundred an' fifty below whar nothing ever teched him again 'cept the buzzards that picked his bones clean afore next sun up.

"Next thing I know'd I was behauled up, hand over hand, by a thick an' any sailor could have done it, an' when I reached the top, Bill and my dear old Bill, stopped just long enough to have a breathin' long or two, an' then we got under kivver an' waited round for the Injuns, but blow me, thar wasn't a single varmint to be seen in any direction, 'cept the dead men that Bill had plugged through the head as he came tearin' up to the rescue.

"'Ye see, pard,' began Bill, 'I found Injun sign a bit up the valley, an' I thought I'd better come back seein' as how ye wasn't feelin' well, an'—

"'Bill stopped suddenly an' grew very pale, an' then I seed he was bleedin' bad, an then he slid down on the grass with a sort o' gasp, an seein' how it was, I began to loosen his shirt to get at the wound, but he stopped me and said:

"'Never mind, pard. One o' them red niggers stuck his knife into my side jest as I began hauling ye up, an' o' course I couldn't defend myself without letin' go the lariat, which I had send ye down to jine Mexican, an' then the varmint took to his legs, an—never mind, pard, it's all up with I'm gittin' blind as a bat. Take everything for yer own. Thar's a cache o' mine behind the big pine tree. Ye'll find it by the ashes whar the fire was built. Take it all and don't forget old Bill.

"I never seen a man fleck out so quick. The Injun's knife had done its deep.

"The speaker was silent and looked out of the car window again, and I knew that I am not mistaken when I say that his eyes were suspiciously moist for a few minutes. I had no heart to break the silence, and so left him to his thoughts; but presently he resumed and said:

"'Now Pete! if he had only left me to take my chances held not lost his life. He saved mine, but he lost his own. I found the cache where the old hunter had hidden many of his richest furs, an' if I've got today one of the best cattle ranches in the state, it's all owin' to the start the old fellow gave me.

"'Pore Bill! I buried him back there on the hilly slope, not far from where he died, an' piled up the rocks for a tombstone, twenty-five years come June, an' that was Bill's grave if you care, stranger."

"Pueblo!" shouted the brakeman. "Change cars for Canyon City." The man who had told me the story "changed," and I saw him no more.—Capt. Carleton in Detroit Free Press.

Plastered Wines.

The American commercial agent at Limoges in a report on the result of the sanitary investigation as to the effect of plastered wines—that is, wines to which sulphate of lime has been added—says that the practice is very ancient, and one about the evil effects of which the highest hygienic authorities have differed. The French Academy of Medicine has held special meetings and discussed the subject at great length. The advantages claimed for the practice are that fermentation is increased very much, that it is very rapid and complete, that the wine keeps longer when it has been plastered, and that the color is richer and more lasting. It is now settled, however, that plastered wines have occasioned functional troubles—as, for instance, in the departments of Aveyron, where, the doctors report, there are consumed the plastered wines suffered from an unquenchable thirst, an insupportable dryness of the throat, and various other troublesome symptoms. The action of sulphate of lime on the tartarate of potash in ordinary wine produces an acid sulphate of potash; and in wine treated with gypsum, sulphuric acid in a free state is developed, and sulphate of magnesia, and these, combined, act as a purgative and sometimes as a caustic. M. Marty, who was appointed by the Academy of Medicine to report on the practice of plastering, examines all the arguments adduced in favor of the practice, and, on his recommendation, the academy condemns the custom as being detrimental to health.—Once a Week.

THE COUNTRY'S SCHOOLS.

Annual Report of Commissioner of Education Dawson.

Commissioner of Education Dawson, in his annual report, says that during the decade from 1876 to 1887 the growth of the public school system has outstripped the increase in population 14 per cent. The gain is mainly in the South, where the school system shows an unparalleled development. The colored children are apportioned an equal share of the school funds, unless in the State of Delaware, and their schools are kept open as long and under as well paid teachers as those of the white children. The funds for the support of these schools are furnished mainly by the white inhabitants, and after making due allowance for all the sums that have been heretofore for the education of the negroes through private sources and through the taxes raised among themselves, it may still be said that the children of those once held in servitude in the South are being educated by the sons of their former masters.

TEN THOUSAND WERE DROWNED.

Further Details of the Great Flood in Japan Much Greater Whole Crime.

Japanese papers received at San Francisco place the total number of persons drowned in the floods of Aug. 20 in the city of Wakayama and in the districts of Minami-Kiri, Mogami-Gun, Hidai Maro, and Hidaka at 10,000, and the number of persons receiving relief at 21,414. The river Kicokawa swelled from thirteen to eighteen feet above the normal level and the villages of Iwahashi were washed away. Along forty-eight other hamlets were covered by the raging waters. The morning of Aug. 19 an enormous mass of earth fell from a mountain near the village of Tennokawa, stopped the course of the river of the same name, which, being swollen, overflowed, submerged the village and drowning nearly all the inhabitants.

MONEY IS SCARCE.

The Demand for Currency Has Considerably Increased.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

Scarcely a week has passed since Government purchases of bonds ceased, but the effect of the change has begun to be noticeable at every point this fall. Now, perhaps, the change is larger and more decisive than it was at first, and rates for money have advanced, while the demand has grown steadily larger for the past three or four weeks. At Chicago the rate last week was 6 per cent, above last year's, and at Boston it was 2 per cent. above last year. Nearly all the principal cities report a large percentage of increase. Of securities returned from abroad, and with the sales at every Wall street auction, the excellent center money is in good, but yet is at Milwaukee and Louisville, and that an advance in rates is expected. Crops from the Northwest have delayed business not a little along the sea coast, and affected purchases for the interior, and yet the past fortnight or week has been one of satisfactory business. Nearly all interior cities report a large demand for supplies. Though the Government crop report was thought slightly unfavorable, other advices have given a more satisfactory view, and hopes are entertained that interior points may meet the increase in population 14 per cent. The gain is mainly in the South, where the school system shows an unparalleled development. The colored children are apportioned an equal share of the school funds, unless in the State of Delaware, and their schools are kept open as long and under as well paid teachers as those of the white children. The race is an open one, and no candidate has any assurance that he will be chosen. It is the general opinion that Judge John P. Rea, of Minneapolis, is more to the President's liking than any other one, and the Minnesota people are coming to the front for him. Mr. Brown, of Cincinnati; Gen. Powell, of Illinois, and Mai. Rich, of New York, are known to be doing all they can for the place.

THE CARDINAL'S COMPROMISE.

It Is Accepted by the London Dock Companies and the Strikers.

The great strike which has paralyzed London for several weeks, and at times threatened with riot and bloodshed, has at last been ended through the good offices of Cardinal Manning. At the final conference, the Cardinal submitted definite proposals from the strikers, the chief point being that the payment of increased wages should commence on Nov. 4, and the terms were accepted by the dock companies, after a protracted debate, in which the Cardinal urged the duty of the Directors to concede the demands and thus restore the city to tranquility. Work will accordingly be resumed at once. There is an almost universal expression of opinion that the amicable and mutually creditable settlement of the trouble, now apparently secured, is entirely due to the untiring efforts and great sagacity of Cardinal Manning, who successfully took the part of mediator between the obstinate contending parties.

PEOPLE FLED TO THE HILLS.

Bridges and Houses Swept Away by the Torrent from a Demolished Dam.

The breach of the large dam of the Genesee Ice Company at Hibernia, Pa., burst with a tremendous amount of water rushed down the Brandywine, overturning the barns and sweeping everything before it. The large bridge which connects the Brandywine just below the dam was swept away, and several frame buildings were carried off by the rushing torrent. Some of the streets of Coatesville are four feet deep with water. The people in the upper stream were warned by the sound of the rushing waters and escaped to the hills. So far as heard from the loss of life and damage in places the members are covered to the extent of eighty feet, but the break was caused by a heavy fall of rain.

SIOUX CITY'S PRIDE.

A DESCRIPTION OF HER HANDSOME CORN PALACE.

It Far Surpasses That of All Previous Years—The Complete Spirit of Architecture Has Given It a Unique Appearance.

(Sioux City Cor. Chicago Tribune)

The Sioux City Corn Palace of 1888 is too latter was upon the lightly palace of 1887. The fickleness of the public has caused it to bloom immediately into a creation of beauty as marvelous as it has novel. The first corn palace structure in 1887 was somewhat rude, although the gem stones of the frame was to a considerable extent veiled by the illusions of its dressing in natural products. It was only 100x160 feet. The idea of the plan was enlarged the structure was largely doubled in size, and the adornment was lavished in the beginning and until the benefit of previous experiences. The site of the corn palace building this year is entirely distinct from all from its predecessors. The building, of course the purpose is identically the same—viz., the display of the agricultural products of the region of the upper Missouri valley about Sioux City, including Northwestern Iowa, South Dakota and Northern Nebraska. The design, however, has been altered and amended so as more perfectly to subserve the central purpose.

The grounds on which the building this year is the same as last year, being the corner of Pierce and Pierce streets, but the building is now in a carried entirely across the street, so that the main entrance is on the street railway and for vehicles. The side entrances are finally on the heart of the city, and on the line of street railway lines, which radiate to all sections of the city and are convenient to the railway stations. The Corn Palace building fronts south on Sixth street. Last year the main entrance was on the east Pierce street, which was of equal importance. This year it is on the Sixth street side of the Corn Palace this year, although it is so arranged that the main entrance on it is viewed, concentrates its main exterior beauty upon the south or Sixth street front. The frontage of the structure is 238 feet and its depth 150 feet.

The exterior is unique and difficult to describe except at great length of detail. It is Moorish in general, but with a variety of features being selected and all together suggestive of the general Moorish, but not exactly an adaptation, perhaps, is more suggestive of the Moorish. POSTMASTER COPELAND, of Detroit, died last Saturday. His term of office would have expired Dec. 4.

A WRITER in the Detroit Journal booms Don M. Dickinson for democratic candidate for governor in 1890.

When are the flood disasters of 1889 to stop? This from Japan is the most appalling of any.

The Philadelphia Ledger calls on gentlemen of the navy to translate their "knots" into miles, to let the public know that 6 knots make 7 miles, and that when the Baltimore made 20.2 knots an hour, she traveled not quite 23½ miles an hour.

President Harrison has given assurance that there is about him nothing of the Socialist or Nationalist, as the fashion is to call it in New England. He told the convention of the western waterways convention that while he was in favor of improved navigation to the utmost extent, yet he was firmly of opinion that the people along the Mississippi should build their own levees.

At a press banquet to an honored newspaper man, John B. Wright, of Boston, both men and women journalists were present and both took part in the speech making. The innovation of having also the "soprano squeak" along with the bass and baritone voices at banquets seems to be taken up rapidly. For some time women have made dinner speeches occasionally in England, and there are several ladies of title who do the thing very creditably.

Prospects for a busy fall and winter trade are still active almost everywhere. So let us boom.

The greatest gas well in the world has been struck in Ohio. This is what might have be expected.

That is a noble bronze monument of Grant which has been unveiled at Leavenworth. Gen. Grant can get a monument everywhere but in New York city, where he is buried.

Our navy has now two cruisers that can make over twenty knots an hour in speed. They are the Vesuvius and the new Baltimore. Each travels as fast as the average American "accommodation" railway train.

Col. W. F. Cody and his great Wild West show will leave a permanent trace in Paris. Rosa Bonheur has been industriously making studies from his Indians and elk and buffalo for future great animal paintings.

The inconvenience to which the public was subjected by the great strike in London will have the effect of making the city itself buy and run the docks. It was almost as if a gas or water company's employes should strike and leave a city in darkness or without water.

And now they say that we, the people of the United States, own the fastest man-of-war afloat in the gallant new cruiser Baltimore. Under not particularly favorable conditions she made 20.2 knots an hour on her trial trip out to sea from the Cramp shipyards at Philadelphia. Well, we have the Baltimore and the Vesuvius anyhow.

Wyoming.

A very interesting point has come up in Wyoming. In this territory women vote at all elections. Contrary to the popular supposition that the sex do not want to vote, the Wyoming ladies do vote enthusiastically, and early and often. A convention met in Cheyenne not long since to prepare a state constitution. This winter Wyoming, with a constitution all ready for statehood, will ask congress to admit her to the Union. But the interesting point is this: It is said a majority of the men of the territory are opposed to woman suffrage. If, however, they put a clause in the new constitution restricting suffrage to male citizens, the women will be a unit against the adoption of the constitution, and will overthrow it. So that if Wyoming comes into the Union it must come with woman suffrage, as matters stand now.

Business Prophecies.

Samuel Benner, an Ohio farmer, many years ago wrote a curious book called "Benner's Prophecies." It referred to good and bad business years, and was based on the principle that events of all kinds follow each other in cycles. There were regular periods of advance and depression in prices. Benner's book contained tables showing the periods of rise and fall in the prices of corn, cotton, pork, iron, etc., with indications for the future. The number of times the prophecies hit the mark was noticeable.

Mr. Benner still survives and has published a new edition of his book. He says that 1889 and 1890 will be booming years, years of great speculative and business activity, followed in 1891 by a panic. Then depression will set in again and last from 1892 to 1897, the century to close with a tremendous trade boom, and go out in glory.

Common Sense in Education.

A teacher writes to The Philadelphia Times asking, apparently in some surprise, whether a teacher is expected to teach pupils manners. Judging from the manners of school children in the streets and elsewhere the question is not hard to answer. The Times says decidedly—yes, and proceeds to tell why:

> If the object of a school education be to fit children for useful and successful lives when they become men and women, we can think of no part of their instruction upon which more stress should be laid than upon that which relates to deportment. When there are a dozen applicants for a position in a business house, the best mannered boy or youth of the lot is invariably selected. Well mannered boys rarely remain long in the messenger service in our cities, for the reason that business men offer them better positions and secure their services. The best mannered salesmen and salswomen sell the most goods, and are in greatest demand. Good mannered men make their way in politics, in the professions, in business life and in society to a far greater degree than the boorish and uncouth, though the latter may be equally diligent and quite as competent in all respects save that of deportment.

Then The Times proceeds to remark, very justly, that the behavior of many school children in public would lead an ordinary observer to the conclusion that good breeding was a lost art.

In the old fashioned school days it was not uncommon for the teacher to set apart Friday afternoon for teaching deportment, "manners," as it was called. Children were at least taught there how to address their elders properly, and how to enter a room and make a bow. If we are ever to have decently mannered children among the masses we must come back to the old custom in some shape.

It is a teacher's place to instruct children in politeness, to teach them to be gentle and courteous and thoughtful of others. For good manners are a part of good morals. It is really far more important that our children should be polite, honest and kindly than that they should know what a participial adjective is. If we can't have both let us have the politeness and the technical grammar.

Let us, then, any teacher alive has time to instruct her pupils that the cardinal principle of politeness is the golden rule.

Sir Edwin Arnold.

The gifted and scholarly author of the "Light of Asia" and other exquisite gems of literature deserves a right hospitable welcome in America. The perpetual wonder, even to Americans who are in the habit of getting through a large amount of work, is how he has found time from his arduous newspaper duties to accomplish so much that will be lasting in literature. He is editor of The London Daily Telegraph, and has been for years.

He is warmly interested in America. His lamented wife, for whom he is at present in mourning, was an American. Whatever he has to say of us is worth hearing.

On Canadian annexation he remarks that the Dominion has her fate in her own hands: "She is equally welcome to go or stay."

As an active journalist, obliged to keep myself informed of chief currents and forces, I feel sure that the free choice and action of Canada will not in the least be interfered with from this side of the boundary.

Here is something which will give genuine pleasure to all true sons and daughters of our republic:

> As an old and very busy journalist I realize the advantage of coming at things at first hand when I can. I greatly like the simplicity with which your matters of state are conducted, judging from my experiences at the White House, and I do not perceive any loss of dignity from your rejection of a fatiguing ceremoniousness. I certainly brought away a sincere respect for the head of your government.

Edwin Arnold has, if possible, more readers and admirers in America than at home. His careful studies of the poetic side of Oriental religions, and the refined yet powerful verse in which he has given us the results of his investigations, are familiar in our homes and hearts. Undoubtedly the "Light of Asia" has had a strong influence on the religious thought of the time. Its pure and gentle yet thoroughly robust philosophy is grateful alike to heretic and orthodox believer.

One of the most remarkable of Sir Edwin's productions is the poem "He and She," perhaps less known than some others. A husband kneels alone beside his dead wife and entreats her to reveal to him the greatest surprise of all that death holds for mortals. He listens, and is told:

> I hold the breath of my soul to hear.
> The answer comes at last, "with the sweet soft voice in the dear old way:"
>
> The utmost wonder is this—I hear
> And see you, and love you, and kiss you, dear;
>
> And am your angel, who was your bride,
> And know that, though dead, I have never died.

Mexico.

A curious and interesting old country is Mexico. She is a little slow. When an earthquake shakes the republic up at 9 o'clock in the afternoon it is not reported in the morning newspapers till the second day after. The morning papers for next day were printed at 5 o'clock of that day, an hour before the earthquake came off. In the United States the last edition of the evening journals would have had all the news from all parts of the continent.

Nevertheless Mexico is going to be one of the greatest of markets for American surplus products. Railroads and internal improvements are springing up with dizzy speed, for Mexico. Vast quantities of Texas beef are shipped thither, and the trade is growing rapidly. Our sister North American republic, in fact, wants a large share of almost everything we have to spare. She will furnish a vast, grand outlet for the surplus we begin to glut our home markets heavily. Let the United States this winter make a liberal reciprocity treaty with Mexico.

The Baltimore belongs to a class of 4,000-ton unarmored cruisers, three like her have been ordered. One, the Philadelphia, is the vessel recently launched at Philadelphia. The third, the San Francisco, is building at the navy yard at San Francisco. These three vessels are built for speed, and they make not less than nineteen knots an hour. They are designed to chase and capture the merchant vessels of a power with which the United States might be at war.

It is a pretty fight that is now on in Canada between the divorce and anti-messenger parties. There is practically almost no divorce in the Dominion, and a large and influential party are making agitation to secure a divorce court. Those advocating it are of British blood and are Protestants. Opposed to them solidly are the Roman Catholic French Canadians, of whom there are a number among the highest law officials. It will be interesting to see which side wins.

Minneapolis says the real estate bubble in Kansas City is distended to the last degree of thinness; that the whole city is sunk beneath the weight of eastern mortgages, and that it is full of empty storehouses and dwellings. Kansas City retorts that for every empty house covered by an eastern mortgage in Kansas City, there is one to number with it in Minneapolis. Meantime this will be interesting reading to people who propose to settle in either one of those towns.

In Calcutta the natives gamble on the amount of rain that will fall in a given time during the rainy season. The natives in our country have had baseball and horse races to bet on for a number of months now, but the season is near its close. What will the gamblers do for excitement? Well, for one thing, they might stake their money on the probable number of weeks or months congress will spend over the contested election cases.

THE TELAUTOGRAPH.

Possibility of Having One's Writing Transmitted by Electricity.

A pleasant faced, elderly gentleman, full beard, neatly cropped, and, like his hair, plentifully sprinkled with white, was sitting in the lobby of the New Denison recently.

"Who's that?" inquired the reporter. He was told the gentleman was Professor Elisha Gray, of Chicago, the famous electrician.

"I have just perfected an invention," said Professor Gray to the reporter, later on, "for the transmitting of the handwriting—a facsimile of the handwriting.

"How is this accomplished?"

"One sits down and writes on a sheet of paper, using a pen or a pencil, and whatever is done at this end, every motion that is made on the paper or off it is faithfully reproduced by a pen upon paper at the other end of the wire at the same time, just as fast or as slow as it is given at this end, and neither faster nor slower."

"What name have you for the instrument?"

"The telautograph, and it can be worked over any length of wire."

"When you say pen and pencil what do you mean?"

"I mean a pen carrying ink, and that the writing or drawing is upon ordinary paper. I use a fluid ink, but any ink will do that will flow readily. One can write with a pencil or a stylographic pen if he chooses. The invention is now practically completed, and I am making a lot of instruments. A company has been formed as a parent organization, and local companies will follow. The instruments will be rented, not sold, and the terms will be similar to those given by the telephone people. But it is exceedingly dissimilar to the telephone, for it writes and does not talk. By it one can transmit a check, a note or draft in the handwriting of the individual. Its accuracy is unquestionable. In that respect it differs from the telephone which is good enough for desultory conversation, but is not sufficient to use in buying or selling. You are writing shorthand, that, of course, could be transmitted by the telautograph. In newspaper work one could not only transmit a description of any great event, a celebration like that of the soldiers' monument held here, or a great disaster on rail or water, but a sketch could be transmitted at the same time to illustrate the article."

"What is the size of the instrument?"

"The top is twenty by twenty-four inches. It may be kept on or beside a desk, or, like the telephone, be hung upon the wall, where it takes up little space. It is secret in its communications, both as to those it gives and those it receives. One does not need to 'hello' and no one can steal the message from the wire. Then the message will come whether one is at hand to receive it or not. One can have a lock and key, and no one can see the communication which has come in his absence. The instrument may be found good for the distribution of press reports to all the newspapers of the land simultaneously. But there are a thousand things to which it may be applicable that neither you nor I may think of at the moment. Its chief value, I apprehend, will be in mercantile business, where the telephone fails by reason of its inability to give a record. One orders by telephone, the man receiving it may say they having done so, but here the writing is proof positive, and cannot be denied.

"How about induction? When several wires run in proximity to each other what is the effect?"

"As to induction, it is wholly unlike the telephone. There is no more trouble from proximity to wires than is encountered in ordinary telegraphy, and as to expense, it will not cost the user any more than the telephone costs him."—Omaha Bee.

Easy Victims.

I've just come up from Chicago over the Wisconsin Central, and I never had so much fun in my life. It was as if I had to stop off at a little town between here and Milwaukee to sell a bill. The train wasn't due until about midnight. I sat up and played dominoes with the night clerk of the hotel, where I stopped until train time. I thought I would take a sleeper, as I was very tired. As luck would have it there was one lower berth empty. As I sat there waiting for the porter to make up my bed everything was still, except for the snoring. Every body had gone to sleep, and one foot sticking out from an upper berth was the only visible sign of life. Then a porter from another sleeper came in.

"Ah, there," said my porter, "hold up!"

"Great Scott! You should have seen the picture presented a moment later. Women shrieked and yelled "Robbers!" Heads popped out, followed by revolvers and bowie knives, until you couldn't count them. "Where is he?" "I haven't got a cent!" "It ain't Black Bill?" "I will up with us!" was heard, while the porter stood in the middle of the aisle, the picture of petrified astonishment.

"Feb de Lod's sake, boss nuffin's do matter. I wus jus' a-tellin' dat nigguh to hole up de ole fat coon, followed by the darky began to grin.

I tell you, the heads popped back pretty suddenly. Nearly everybody had seen it, first, but they soon got over it and they began to chaff each other. There wasn't much sleep in that car the rest of the night.—Commercial Traveler in Minneapolis Journal.

Thomas Wentworth Higginson has an eventful history. Son of a merchant, he graduated at Harvard, studied theology and was pastor of a first Congregational church at Newburyport, Mass., and was obliged to leave it on account of his anti-slavery preaching; he was then an unsuccessful candidate for congress on the Free Soil ticket. Returning to the pulpit he was pastor of a free church at Worcester, Mass., from 1852 to 1858, when he left the ministry and devoted himself exclusively to literary pursuits.

The United States and Canada.

There is no doubt but some measure must be taken in the matter of the commercial relations of the United States and Canada. There is a powerful and growing sentiment on both sides of the line in favor of freer trade in some shape between the two countries. Each wants what the other has to sell. In 1889 the imports into Canada from the United States were $9,000,000 greater than from Great Britain.

Josiah Quincy recently prepared a paper on the subject of trade between the two countries which states the case very clearly. He said there were three ways of securing freedom of trade. The first was by political union, making one vast country of the United States and Canada. That is not practicable at present certainly. Mr. J. H. Beadle, one of whose strong points as a newspaper writer is hard fack, in a tour of Canada during the summer found the annexation sentiment there comparatively feeble.

The second possible agreement mentioned by Mr. Quincy is commercial union, the maintenance of a common tariff by the two countries against all other countries, "and a common internal revenue system of taxation, with some equitable division of the receipts." This is the popular idea at present, perhaps, in both countries. But such a union would cripple the treaty making power of both countries with other countries. For instance, if the United States wished to conclude an agreement of amity and commerce with, say, Mexico, she would have to consult Canada, and thus the treaty making power of the president and senate would be impaired and our government shorn of its dignity and prestige. Again, if the United States wished to make the slightest change in her internal revenue laws, under commercial union it would be necessary to obtain the consent of the parliament at Ottawa to that change. This the people of the United States would not submit to.

The third kind of agreement seems to Mr. Quincy the only one that is desirable or possible. This is the treaty of reciprocity, "admitting some or all of the products of either country into the other free of duty." At a great meeting of New England manufacturers and merchants in Boston not long since, the sentiment was unanimous in favor of some kind of freer commercial intercourse.

A Story of the War.

BY A. H. GIBSON.

LIEUT. ARTHUR Hartwell of the Union army had received a wound in an engagement fought the day before, skirmishing parties of which had engaged each other on the White River in Arkansas.

However, the young officer was now sufficiently convalescent to mount his jet-black war horse and ride about the camp for exercise. He hoped soon to get himself into fighting trim again. He was a zealous, courageous young soldier, and he could not endure with patience his enforced inactivity.

Hearing that excellent wild fruit abounded in the woods about one mile and a half from the Federal camp, Hartwell determined to ride over and enjoy a delicious treat.

While riding leisurely along through a large canebrake, midway between the camp and the woods to which he was bound, he was surprised and captured by a band of rough guerrillas who had been reconnoitering the enemy's position from a safe distance.

The Union spies had reported only that rumors of late were so near miles within ten miles of their own lines.

So Hartwell had ridden off alone, never dreaming of what was to befall him. He had been riding carelessly along, inadvertently whistling some little tune heard at camp, and thinking of the dear old mother far away in her cabin on the Kansas line.

Suddenly his horse was stopped, his arms were pinioned to his sides by brawny hands, while villainous, hardened countenances leered into his face.

"Don't yer chip nary word, or by the holy smokin' worsh of t'other world I'll send a bullet clean through yer durned Yankee carcass," said one to poor Hartwell, holding up an old musket threateningly near the captive's handsome head.

Hartwell was too completely surprised to frame an answer. The guerrillas surged about him wild with glee over their great capture. A Yankee officer was not picked up every day. Their rejoicing, uncouth and profane, rendered them for a short time incautious. The tramp, tramp of coming horsemen threw the jubilant band of four guerrillas into considerable excitement. In a moment every man was quiet and on his guard, instinctively, each rough fellow sought unslung carbine, the rifled property of some dead soldier.

Every eye was turned in the direction of the approaching riders. That there were not more than two or three could easily be told from the sounds that the horses' feet made on the hard, clay-baked road by the canes.

Lieutenant Hartwell was for the moment forgotten. Were these riders were one of the blue or the gray? The tall, dense, intervening canes prevented as answer to that mute question. Three guerrillas had stationed themselves behind clumps of vegetation, while the fourth held Hartwell's horse with his left hand, his right grasping a carbine.

It was a favorable moment for Lieutenant Hartwell. He recognized it at once. While the short absorption of the guerrillas' attention lasted, Hartwell, quick as a wink, slipped from the saddle, and, ere his captors were aware, with far more agility than his weak physical condition would seem to warrant, he had darted off through the towering canes, where a horse could not follow.

The guerrillas, so absorbed in awaiting the approach of the invisible horsemen, did not for a moment observe the empty saddle. Then, with a smothered oath, the one holding the officer's horse struck him a severe blow to make him stand aside. The spirited animal resented the blow, and with a savage lunge the bridle-rein was jerked from the grasp of the irate man who was thrown hardly to the ground, where he lay half stunned as the Lieutenant's fiery horse went tearing away down the road.

Then the horsemen rode into view. An exclamation of rude pleasure fell from the lips of the guerrillas. The grips on the carbines loosened. They recognized in the newcomers two of their own men, who were deserters from Van Dorn's ranks, although they still wore the gray. These men were soon informed of the capture and sudden escape of the Federal officer.

"Jes' plum like a blamed Yankee," remarked one of the newcomers. "They're all slicker 'n eel; they'll any of em squeeze through a knot-hole if they're gin hail a chance."

"Waal, I sartain believe yer," said the leader, who had menaced Hartwell; "but he kain't be far off, boys. Them Yankees kain't run through a canebrake yer's better'n a city gal kin. Let's be on his trail, and set sta' lyer a-givin' sich chances ter beat we 'uns."

After a hasty consultation it was decided to conceal the horses in a grove hard by, and every man enter the pursuit, which they felt sure would lead to the recapture of their escaped prisoner. Striking into the cane-brake, they were soon on the Lieutenant's track, which led through the intricacies of the thicket.

Meanwhile, Arthur Hartwell was making gigantic strides through the lonely, lease, stumbling, or clinging vines, which were densely entangled about the canes; splashing and dashing into hidden pools of stagnant water; then out again and into another worse than the first, despoiling the polish of his No. 7's and flicking with clayey splashes his spotless uniform.

His physical strength was not adequate to the demand which his really desperate effort to escape enforced. Still, on he hurried.

The early autumn day was intensely hot. The sun seemed to bear a particular spite toward that spot, and poured down mercilessly upon pursued and ursuers. The huge canes defied the admission of any coolsing breeze which might be astir without.

Ere Lieutenant Hartwell had reached the southern border of the thicket he was almost exhausted. Great beads of sweat stood on his face, and his limbs trembled from fatigue. He stood irresolute as to what course to pursue next. He had been forced to flee in an opposite direction from the Union camp. Where would he seek refuge? His strength was failing. He could not keep up the flight any longer. Then he dared not hide among the canes. Already, in nearing pursuit, he could hear the heavy boots of the guerrillas crushing canes and brambles, leaving no nook unsearched.

Just before him, through a grove of cottonwood, walnut, and hickory, all tinged with autumn's russet gold, he caught sight of a handsome southern home, built of red sandstone, with clambering vines half veiling the front and roof, and beautiful flowers of every variety enamoring it, leading to the entire place the splendid glow and beauty of tropical aspect. It was the home of some abettor of the Southern cause Hartwell knew this, and he felt quite sure that if he sought refuge there he would be handed over to his rough captors, who, if they did not belong to the Confederate service, favored it, while they bitterly opposed the Federal army.

But haste, not debate, was necessary. He could hear the guerrillas drawing nearer; their curses, too, reached him, as numerous at every turn baffled them. They had expected to find it no task at all to run him down. But the end was not yet. Hartwell, however, knew that they would soon reach the southern limit of the canebrake; then escape would be impossible.

Not pausing to think again that it might prove "out of the frying-pan into the fire," the hunted officer dashed forward toward the house. He leaped over the low well-trimmed hedge that surrounded the attractive grounds of the lovely Southern home, then he stood motionless and gazed in evident admiration at the sweet picture which confronted his vision.

A beautiful girl, with plump, graceful figure, wonderful masses of dusky golden tresses flowing in luxuriant ripples all over her proud little head, and wonderfully eyes starry with mirth and intelligence, was at work in the yard near the house. She was singing in a clear, bird-like soprano voice something about a brave lover wearing the gray. Her deft, snowy fingers combined from a clothes-line, stretched from an Indian peach tree near the house to a stout cherry in the corner of the yard, miscellaneous articles of laundry. These she deposited into a large, old-fashioned clothes-basket that rested on the soft, velvety grass at her feet.

In another moment Lieut. Hartwell stood uncovered before this fair South-ern girl, bowing with the urbanity of a perfect gentleman.

The song ceased, and Elma Stariton gave a start when she discovered the handsome Union officer bowing so politely before her.

"Pardon me," he uttered rapidly, "I did not wish to startle you."

Then he briefly mentioned his capture by the guerrillas and how he had escaped, ending by entreating her to show him, if possible, some secure hiding-place. Would she heed his importunity?

Elma Stariton had two brothers and a father in the Confederate service. This man was as enemy to the dear Southern cause. Would it be right to assist him in his efforts to avoid recapture? Would it not be the very height of disloyalty for her to hide the Federal officer on the Stariton premises?

The girl thought rapidly, one hand, beautiful and shapely, resting on the clothes-line, the other dropped at her side.

She glanced up into the pale but firm face of the man who had applied to her for aid. His eyes were so blue and manly, his whole countenance so noble, her warm heart felt a throb of pity. His captors were not soldiers but swamp guerrillas—a bold, evil-disposed band. She had quite forgotten that he had told her that. Elma Stariton was not in sympathy with the guerrillas infesting the swamps and canebrakes round about her home.

But, had she been, the comely face before her would have been sufficient to shake it.

The autumn breeze lifted the sheets on the line, giving Elma a glimpse of several roughly clad men, hatted in the adjacent grove, evidently at a loss which way to turn to find the retreat of the Yankee officer. They were the guerrillas. A scornful flash lit up the wine-dark eyes of the girl as she turned to the house, who seemed to be awaiting his doom or his salvation at her fair hands. Yes; she would save him. But how?

Ah! it is surely too late to help him to escape recapture. Soul two of the guerrillas have started toward the house, leaving the others in consultation at the border of the grove. In another moment they will have seen the hunted man, screened by the clothes on the line. On they stalk toward the house.

Elma is a girl of ingenuity, one accustomed to acting in emergencies. She will foil those rough outlaws yet. It is not too late.

"Here," she said in a very low voice, and she quickly lifted the clothes which she had thrown into the capacious basket. "If you will lie down in my old clothes-basket I think I shall be able to hide you securely."

Very obediently, very quickly Arthur Hartwell coiled himself up in Elma Stariton's clothes-basket, and very skillfully she covered him completely with the clothes she held. Then she went on unpinning clothes from the line, which she threw loosely upon the basket. No one would have guessed there was a man beneath that mass of clean clothes.

Elma was again singing as merrily as a lark when the guerrillas drew near. One of them bounded over the hedge. He approached the girl, who gave a well-feigned start, greeting him thus:

"The Carter! What do you mean by startling a body this way?"

She knew this man well, as his homes not far from the Starltons'.

"Didn't go ter startle yer, Miss Elmy; I'm on ther hunt of a blamed Yankee officer what's escaped us."

"Well, Ike, we're not in the habit of entertaining Yankee officers here unless we are obliged to. It is not a good place to hunt for them on our premises.

"I know hit ain't, Elmy," said the fellow; "but we tracked him this away," he explained.

"How did he escape you, Ike?" she asked, trying to show an interest in the subject, hoping thereby to allay any suspicion that might have been formed in the guerrillas' minds.

The guerrilla launched out a full account of the capture and escape of Lieutenant Hartwell. Elma listened as attentively as if it were all a new story to her.

"As we-uns was consultin' in yon grove, Pete Jarvis 'lowed he done seed a blue uniform, or somethin' that looked mighty like one, over kyar by these clothes. That's why I come kyar a bothertin' you-uns."

A sneeing laugh followed this announcement. Then Elma said:

"An optical illusion. I suppose it was mother's blue muslin curtains that Jarvis took for a Yankee uniform." And Elma held up to view a pair of dark-blue cross stripes.

Ike Carter eyed them closely, then glanced at the overladen basket on the grass, then back at the girl as she was smoothing the azure curtains.

"Hain't Pete Jarvis a good un ter sight tanks? No wonder we-uns done lost his trail with such a leader as Pete. I'm plumb sorry, Miss Elmy, thet he insulted them curtains thet way, by takin' 'em for a Yank's trousers." And Ike Carter laughed at what he considered a clever joke.

"I should think," the girl remarked drily, "He, tell your party, with my compliments, that I think their eyes must be full of cobwebs brushed from the eaves. Tell them to wash them out and make another investigation of the thicket," she called to him as he strode away, looking rather crestfallen for Ike had seen what Jarvis had, and both had decided it must be Hartwell's uniform. But Jarvis being absent had to bear the ridicule. Ike Carter could not stand it to have the bright Southern girl laugh at his blunders.

Dear reader, you and I know that it was a glimpse of a blue uniform that those guerrillas had caught. But we can smile over the cleverness of Elma Stariton in turning it off so nicely, and leave a deep sigh of full gladness that her mother had those blue curtains, and that they happened to be in the wash that week.

The guerrillas went off, and evidently felt too sheepish over their mistake to venture within range of those mocking, dancing, wine-dark eyes, for they did not return.

When the coast was clear, Elma uncovered the queerly hidden Lieutenant, who crawled out, with real thankfulness to his lovely deliverer, though his limbs were so stiff that she had to assist him to the little closet, where he remained effectually concealed during the rest of the afternoon. Here she brought him every refreshment that her home afforded.

Under cover of the night, brave Elma Stariton escorted Lieutenant Hartwell safe within the Union lines. Ere he parted from her he pressed a gold band, saying: "If I survive the war, I shall return to thank you as I am unable to do now."

Arthur Hartwell did not forget his promise. When peace reigned gloriously over a grief-bowed nation, he enjoyed a lucrative position in public life; but somehow a pair of wine-dark eyes ever haunted him. He took a trip to the balmy South. He found Elma lovely as of yore, but living and and alone in her flower-decked Southern home. Her father and brothers slept

AT CUSHING'S ISLAND.

SKETCHES AT A PLEASANT RESORT DOWN IN MAINE.

Pretty Pictures and Handsome Girls—The Work of a Chicago Sketching Club—Longfellow's Birthplace—Sandwich Parties.

Cushing's Island, Me., letter to Chicago Inter Ocean.

THE urgent request of the guests of the Ottawa House, as well as at the suggestion of art lovers of Portland who are interested in the work of Chicago's sketching party, an exhibition is now in progress here at which are seen some of the many sketches made on the island during the past few weeks. It is something unusual to have an art exhibition during the summer months, and hardly an ordinary attraction at a summer resort, but Cushing's Island has a brainy element, and its visitors are not judged by ordinary standards. The artists and pupils who came here from the West have had but since the first of July in which to prepare the many sketches now on exhibition. The pictures have been placed in the hotel reading-room. The sketches include water-colors, oil paintings, and studies in charcoal and pencil. Some of them have been so meritorious as to meet with immediate purchasers. Many of the sketches show are the work of beginners, who have begun well. Many of them never did any outdoor sketching before. It is remarkable that there is an absence of figures and flowers—unless exceptional—from the study of a head for which pretty little Edith Sexton posed. The two little Sexton girls are excellent models, and would prove valuable aids to any artist who used to paint a picture representing the two little English princes in the tower.

The artists have painted almost everything on, about, or near the island, except the town of Portland. Prohibition prevented painting. One object that has been introduced into almost every sketch is the light-house marking the main channel, or Portland light, as it is called.

One of the few points about the island that have not been sketched in every artist in the vicinity is old Fort Gorges, in Portland harbor. It is rather an impressive looking fort, although it is no longer in use, having served its purpose.

Excursions to Boston are common events. These parties usually consist of ladies, as the gentlemen are too scarce to be spared. The ladies, as a rule, are unfortunate, for they usually encounter a storm, and come back looking unusually pale. They become so seasick on the water that it is not to be wondered at that several of them wanted to die earth while on the ocean. One young lady narrated her experiences on the boat. When she awoke she found that it was daylight and that she had a desire for fresh air. No one was in sight except a pretty girl, a stranger, who remarked that she was getting up early so as to get some fresh air. The first lady asked what time of day it was, and was informed that it was just four o'clock in the morning. After a while the Chicago lady went on deck and saw the pretty girl getting "fresh air." The "fresh air" consisted of a sheepish-looking young man, who had his arm about the pretty girl's waist, who in turn rested her pretty head upon the young man's shoulder. The Chicago girl looked the other way, and for the first time realized why so many "fresh air funds were started in the East.

A point of special interest to visitors in Portland is the house where the poet Longfellow was born. It is in the lower part of the town and attracts continual attention.

Another point of interest in Portland, and which is visited by every stranger, is Longfellow square, one of the most beautiful spots in the Forest City of Maine. In the center of the square is the splendid heroic statue of Longfellow here and reared in Portland, the pride of his people.

One of the Chicagoans returned from Portland with a missing story. A small boy said to his mother:

"Mother, give me money to go to the circus."

"No, I can't let you go there."

"Then let me have a tooth pulled; I want to do something."

There are many beautiful things to be seen about Cushing's Island, but among the living pictures few call out more enthusiasm than the one of the man and the girl," as she is called by the many who have eyes for the beautiful. The "pretty girl" is Miss Lilla Wittredge, of Lynn, Mass., who came here with her mother. Miss Wittredge has been likened unto a wild rose, she so far to look upon. She is of the brunette type, with dark, lustrous eyes, a plentiful supply of black hair, a complexion that is rich and rare, defying description. Miss Wittredge is about 17 years of age, but is nevertheless a belle. She has an immense repertoire of dresses, in the selection of which she has shown not only startling originality but exquisite taste. The professional artists have thus far been unsuccessful in getting Miss Wittredge to pose for them, but here is an attempt at a portrait taken in charcoal and pencil. Some of them have been so meritorious as to meet with immediate purchasers. Many of the sketches show are the work of beginners, who have begun well. Many of them never did any outdoor sketching before. It is remarkable that there is an absence of figures and flowers—unless exceptional—from the study of a head for which pretty little Edith Sexton posed. The two little Sexton girls are excellent models, and would prove valuable aids to any artist who used to paint a picture representing the two little English princes in the tower.

Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup.

There is certainly something remarkable in this preparation, as it is meeting with a success never attained by any other medicine. It really does cure rheumatism. For over twenty years I have been a great sufferer from rheumatism, in a disease of stomach, and for three years past have been unable to do a day's work. I tried Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup, and found it to be a most powerful and efficacious remedy. All who are afflicted with rheumatism should at once procure it and use it according to directions. Just as soon as I can get a little money I shall go to Philadelphia and Boston to see the proprietors of this valuable medicine, and if I can do so I shall make a large order for it. I have recommended it to many persons, and they all say it is the best medicine they ever used. I shall continue to do so. Yours truly, JOHN H. BRAGG, Ex-Sheriff, Philadelphia, Pa.

A Manager's Superstition.

One morning before the curtain was standing at the door of a prominent theater of a Philadelphia where business had grown to be down been very bad, in company with the manager, a gentleman who has since made a fortune as management, and whose name is as familiar to everybody as a household word. Suddenly the manager darted away and rushed to the sidewalk, where, without the slightest warning to the individual concerned, he began to furiously rub the lump of a passing hunchback.

The man paused in bewilderment and stared at the handsome manager with surprise closely bordering upon absolute terror. It was evident that he thought himself in the hands of some well-shaped lunatic. "What's the matter?" he stammered out in broken words. "Wh—why are you rubbing me? Do—do you think I'm going to have a fit, or have you got one?" "My dear sir," replied the ready and radiant manager, "there is nothing the matter with either you or myself. I am sane. But do you ever go to the theater, and would you like to attend the performance here tonight and bring your family? Now, don't be bashful, I know you would—and it shan't cost you a cent, not even not a single cent for the whole party, my good sir. Why, I'd give a box office with me and pick out what seats you want. The lady in the house are not too good for you!"

Whereupon the eager manager rather dragged the bewildered hunchback to the box-office window and gave his five first-class reserved seats for that night. The man was still in a state of bewilderment, but he lighted, but hardly knowing what to make of it all. When he had got a moment or two away he was overheard to the writer, and, finally, but earnestly, his whole countenance lighted up with smiles: "I've struck it at last and our run of bad business is over. I have a packed house to-night and make my money all the time. I'm sure of it. I know well. I've been waiting for a hunchback to come along for a month, but he has finally appeared, and you can rest assured that all our trouble is over!"

Freaks of Aphasia.

Aphasia patients frequently present evidence of mental weakness, but they are rarely, if ever, actually insane or idiotic. Often their emotional nature seems deprived of its usual controlling force, and they lunch or cry with more than infantine readiness. The emotional sobriety of adult life seems to be lost in the return of the simplicity of childhood or the advent of premature senility. Sometimes the sufferer seems distressed at his future efforts at speech, which he abandons with looks of disgust and despair. At other times he seems amused at his own success, and joins in the laugh which his ludicrous attempts draw irresistibly from the by-standers. The sense of his failure always strikes him forcibly, whether on its vexatious or its comical side. He seems anxious to give us the impression that he knows perfectly what he wants to say, and could say it, if some incomprehensible obstacle did not crucily bar the way. The words were present in his mind, and the machinery of speech stands ready to evolve them, but somehow the usually ready wheels refuse to move.—Boston Budget.

THE BIGGEST GET AWAY.

When, in the halcyon days of old, I was a little tyke,
I used to fish in pickerel ponds for salmons and the like;
And, oh, the bitter sadness with which my soul was fraught
When I realized I some at midnight with the puny string I'd caught!

And, oh, the indignation and the valor I'd display
When I claimed that all the biggest fish I'd caught had got away!

Sometimes it was the rusty hooks, sometimes the fragile lines
And many times the treacherous reeds would foil my designs;
But whether hooks or lines or reeds were actually to blame,
I kept right on at losing all the monsters, just the same—
I never lost a little fish—yes, I am free to say.
It always was the biggest fish I caught that got away

And so it was, when, later on, I felt ambition pass
Fresh colors minnow joys to bolder game for pike and bass;
I found it quite convenient, when the minnies wouldn't bite,
And I returned all booties from the watery grave at night,
To frame a cheery aspect and recount in accents light
How the biggest fish that I had caught had some-how got away.

And, really, fish look bigger than they are before they're caught—
When the prize is lost into a bow and the slender line is taut,
When a fellow finds his heart rise up like a dough-nut in his throat,
And he hangs on a frenzy up and down the leaky boat!

Oh, you who've been a fishing will indorse me when I say
That it always is the biggest fish you catch that gets away.

'Tis even so in other things—yes, in our greedy eyes
The biggest boon is some elusive, never captured prize;
For a sigh for the honors and the sweets of human life—
Like fishermen we brave the seas that roll in endless strife;
And then at last, when all is done and we are spent and gray
We are like the biggest fish we've caught are those that got away.

I would not have it otherwise; 'tis better there should be Much bigger fish than I have caught a-swimming in the sea;
For now some worthier or—than I may angle for that game—
May by his arts entice, entrap and compel me to the same;
Which, having done, perchance he'll bless the fish which I did get away
That the biggest fish he ever caught were those that got away.

CAPTURED BY COMANCHES.

I had been scouting from Fort Bascom, on the Canadian river, and carrying despatches between that point and Fort Stanton on the Rio Pecos, for six months, h— —the Comanches called the turn on me. It is agreed that an Apache is a — —ight, but in the old days there wasn't much choice between the tribes. All were bloodthirsty and relentless, and it mattered little into whose hands a prisoner might fall. Every torture which ingenuity could suggest was certain to be applied, and no ransom, however great, could effect the release of a prisoner. It was while engaged in such an effort that my first capture came about.

A party of citizens from Santa Fe had come out to Fort Bascom for a hunt along the Canadian river to the east. They were all well known men, and were outfitted in the finest style, having the best of firearms, and being accompanied by four hunters and guides of long experience. The Indians were busily hostile at this time, and although seldom seen near the fort, they were ever on the watch for any one leaving its shelter. This party numbered twenty, all told, and was strong enough to go anywhere, providing it was well handled. It left the post one Sunday morning, and was gone three weeks, and, up to two days before reaching the post, all went well. Then a sergeant, corporal, and twenty troopers, started behind one morning as the party broke camp, and three Comanches dashed in on their ponies and cut him off. They mounted him on his own horse and started a run half a mile before the mishap was discovered, and, although pursuit was made, it was useless. The doctor was a man of prominence, holding some position under the government, and having many friends, and the party no sooner reached the post than it was determined to make every effort to secure his release. It was able to think of sending out an armed force, and it was finally decided that I should go out as an emissary to treat for his release. It was agreed that I could promise the Indians as high as $10,000 in cash for his release, and all were hopeful that this large sum would induce the redskins to give him up. I had been told time and again that the Comanches had never been known to give up a prisoner, and I was therefore in a state of doubt as I rode away on my errand. I had got to put myself in their hands in order to negotiate, and if they refused to give up the doctor it was probable that they would hange on to me.

I rode away to the east, knowing that the prisoner had been conveyed to some camp in the Wichita range. I had all day without sighting an Indian. At dark I went into camp, and had no alarms during the night, and at sun rise was again travelling into the mountains. At about 11 o'clock, while riding over broken ground, I caught sight of an Indian taking cover, and halting my horse I made the peace signs with my blanket. Ten minutes later I was surrounded by a dozen warriors, who were evidently astonished at my foolhardiness. I could speak their lingo fairly well, and told them what I had come for, and asked to be taken to the nearest village. This request was sullkily complied with, and at the end of two hours I found myself in the little village of Iaul Moon, chief of all the Comanches. The village was scattered along the river for a mile or more, and numbered at least a thousand souls. My advent was hailed with whoops and yells and other tokens of satisfaction, and even when it was known that I had voluntarily come into camp on an errand of mercy I was hard to restrain some of the young bucks from doing me injury. I was taken direct to Iaul Moon's tent, and my reception there was anything but cordial. He was anything but noble in speech and look. He was dirty, unkempt and out of sorts, and I had no sooner set eyes on him than I knew my mission would be a failure.

"Why does the dog of a white man come to my camp?" was his salutation.

"Four days ago some of your warriors captured a white hunter a sun's journey to the west," I replied.

"They did; and to-morrow he shall die."

"I have come from his friends to buy his liberty. They will give Red Moon more silver than he ever had before."

"I spit upon the—white man's money!" he replied. "The white man has killed my young men, built his forts on my land, and would drive us away if he was strong enough. I would not take food from his hand if I were starving!"

I named the price which we would pay for the doctor, and tried to make him understand how many guns and blankets and other things the amount would purchase, but he grew more and more excited, and finally shouted:

"Does the white man regard the Comanches as squaws that their heads can be turned by soft talk? Only the dog Indian begs for mercy from a foe or takes presents from an enemy. Were you to offer all you had I would not give him up. He shall die. Have said it!"

Finding him so obstinate and determined, I mentioned that I had come alone and put myself in his power, trusting to his honor to be permitted to return in safety.

"Did I ask you to come?" he thundered. Are you not brave to insult me? You shall see the other prisoner die, and then you shall suffer the same fate!"

I began to protest, but was hurried away to a lodge, disarmed, searched and very roughly used. Before being left alone my hands and feet were tied, and the buck who did this give me a good day in the shape of a slap in the face that made my teeth rattle. I was left alone until just at dark, when a boy brought me a gourd of water, and held it to my lips while I drank. I thanked him and inquired where the doctor was. He replied that he was confined in a lodge about two hundred feet away, and that he would be put to the torture the next day. All the tribe within call had been notified to be present. I asked him about my own fate, and he said it was another story. I was to die the day after. If there was any doubt about this it was soon dispelled. The boy had scarcely disappeared when old Red Moon appeared. He was now fully dressed as a chief, and had on all his dignity. I was lying on my back, and he stood over me for a moment, glowering down upon me with savage expression before he said:

"Does the white man think the Comanche a dog that he can come into his village and insult him?"

"On the contrary the white man knows the Comanche to be brave," I replied, "and no chief is greater or braver than Red Moon."

"But you come to buys us off."

"The white man captured by your brave warriors is neither a soldier, hunter nor scout. He is a man of peace, living far away. He has never harmed you. He is a great medicine man among his people. For these reasons his friends hoped the great chief would spare his life. We wished to make you a present."

"White dog, you lie!" shouted the chief. "You wish to get us in a trap!"

I argued and protested, and again appealed to his honor in many ways, but he heard me through, and then gave me several hearty kicks in the side, and exclaimed:

"You shall die! You were a fool to come!"

The kicks made me mad, and feeling that I had no hope of release I opened on Red Moon in the choicest language of the west. I called him a coward, polroon, squaw, buzzard, and everything else I mean I could think of. I offered to fight him in any way he wanted, and boasted that I had on one occasion charged five of his bravest warriors and killed two and run the others into the woods. I gave it to him straight from the shoulder for ten minutes without a break, and he did not interrupt me by word or gesture. When I finally paused for want of breath he said:

"The white man is not a dog, as I thought for. He is a brave man. He will not cry and beg for his life when the fire is lighted at his feet. My young men shall let it be known at the fort that he died without being a woman."

"And that's more than you can say for any of your warriors!" I flung back at him. "The Comanche whines like a dog, when he is hurt. He cannot stand fire. When his feet get a little warm he becomes a child."

He pulled his knife from his belt, thinking to end my life then and there, but on second thought he replaced it and walked out. Directly he had gone two warriors came in with a liberal supply of food, and my arms were untied and I was given a chance to eat. They appeared good natured, and as the things were being replaced one of them said:

"The white man is very brave. He will hold out a long time."

The two guards were placed outside my tent, and knowing that I had no show for escape, I made myself as comfortable as possible and soon fell asleep. It may be thought curious that a person could sleep soundly under such circumstances, but as a matter of fact I did not open my eyes until long after daylight. There was considerable bustle in the camp, and in a few minutes my breakfast was brought in. Arms and legs were now untied, and two of the three bucks who came into the tent informed me that preparations were being made to torture the doctor. It was an hour later before I was sent for. Then my arms were tied free and my legs were hobbled just below the knees. While I could walk it was only with short steps, and I was only with short steps, and the idea of my trying to escape from such a crowd was too absurd to be entertained. I found the inhabitants of the village drawn up in two long lines extending out on the plains. Even children 5 or 6 years old were in line, each one armed with stick or switch. I was led to the head of the line between two warriors, and in four or five minutes the doctor was brought out. Red Moon had arranged this as a mental torture in both of us. He signified to us that we might speak, and I at once informed the doctor of my errand and its failure. He expressed his pleasure that his friends thought so well of him, and his sorrow that I had brought misfortune upon myself, and he assured to have made up his mind to die like a man. I knew the Indians thoroughly, and I told him what the programme would be. After running the gauntlet, he would be tied to a post and submitted to the powder torture, which consisted in shooting charges of powder into the flesh, with the muzzle of the gun only a foot or two away. After that would come cutting and mutilating, and he would not be tied to the fire stake until pretty thoroughly exhausted. I advised him to do as I intended to do—leap upon some warrior as he ran down the lines, seize his knife or tomahawk, if possible, and then fight until they would have to kill him then and there. He calmly replied that he should adopt the plan, shook me by the hand, and said that I was ready.

As we talked I had been getting the lay of the village. It was only a quarter of a mile long, and on level ground, and not over a half mile to the foothills. I had made up my mind to make a break for liberty, and had my plans all laid before the doctor started. Red Moon commanded me to tell him that he was to run straight down the lane and begin, and that if he made a good run he would not be much hurt. I gave him the information, and advised him to make his break about two-thirds of the way down, as he came to the haut of the warriors. When I stepped back my elbow touched a guard on either side, and I saw that they were quite interested in the scene before them. When I dropped my hand to my knife it was close to the hilt of the warrior's knife, and then I was as ready as I could be. The doctor was a powerful big fellow and was entirely naked. He was to start at the signal of a gun fired in the air, and when the signal came he bounded away like a deer. The lines closed up and every one tried to strike at him, but the climax came when he made his left. He gave a leap to one side, he seized a tomahawk, and at that moment I got hold of the knife without being detected. A great cry arose and one of the guards started forward. I bent down and cut my thongs at a single sweep, and then, by a back hand stroke, I sent the knife so far into the body of the other guard, who had given me no attention, that it was wrenched from my grasp as he fell. Then I bounded away down the river, and I had had a start of twenty rods before pursuit began.

It is not braggadocio to assert that in those days I had the speed and bottom of a thoroughbred. I hadn't the least fear of being overtaken after I got that start by any one on foot, and as I at once made for the broken ground their ponies had no advantage. I looked back only once, and I saw the entire war of the village. At least fifty Indians were pursuing me on foot, and a few minutes later a score of others had mounted. The pursuers were so strung out that no one dared come near, and when I got settled down to the pace I ran for my life. In the six minutes I was in the foothills, and in ten I had gained the shelter of the scrub pine. At that moment twenty rifles turned loose on me, but none of the bullets came near me. I kept to cover the dodge, and I contrived to put in my bed leks. They followed me for about four miles, losing ground all the time, and then drew off to attend to the doctor. It was five days before I got back to the fort, my clothes in tatters, and my strength almost gone, and it was two years before I learned the particulars of the doctor's death. He made a gallant fight when he got possession of the tomahawk, killing a warrior and a boy and mortally wounding another and an old man, but he was overpowered and disarmed, and then the devils glutted their vengeance. Some idea of his sufferings can be imagined from the fact that he was under some sort of torture for three days and nights, and there was life still left in him when he was given up to the fangs of the village dogs. The Comanche who gave me the particulars was then "a word of the government," drawing his rations, ammunition and blankets from the very men whose scalps he had hungered for, and he could not be punished. He identified himself as the warrior who was guarding me on the right when I made my break, and for his carelessness on that occasion the chief stripped him of all his worldly possessions and gave the goods to the widow of the warrior I had slain.—New York Sun.

Aerated Fuel.

Petroleum, which has been used for some time in connection with steam, is now rapidly coming into vogue for heating, melting and the working of metals. For these purposes some other medium besides steam must be resorted to for forcing up the oil, and after devices without number have been tried, the use of air under more or less pressure remains the most satisfactory. By this means wagon tires one-half to one and a half inches are welded in one minute, and car axles, which will repeatedly break one hour and a quarter to heat, are heated in thirty-five minutes. At one furnace alone the saving by the use of oil is said to be $10.40 per day, and another company puts its saving in fuel at 60 per cent. One of the great advantages of this mode of heating is the effect produced on the metal operated upon, which comes out improved by the process. It works softer under the hammer than when heated with coal, and when hammered or welded the ring is worked out of it more completely.—Chicago Times.

ARE YOU A DEMOCRAT?

Is another column is an article from the Petoskey Democrat, entitled "Party Papers and Party Support," to which we desire to call the attention of some of the democrats of this county. During the past two or three years this paper has not had the democratic support it ought to have had. The reduction in size now forced upon us is as much the result of democratic indifference as all other things together. While we had the postoffice, the salary enabled us to keep the paper up to a larger size and a higher standard than its own receipts would justify. Now the receipts of the office do not permit so great expense, and we must reduce to save increasing debts. There are dozens of democrats in every township who ought to take the paper and pay for it in advance, who always find some convenient excuse for not doing so. They do not question the policy, the size, or the price of the paper, but generally say they can't afford it, or that they are taking more other papers than they can read, and so on. A few have taken the paper for years without paying, till we got tired of the expense, and stopped it; and now we cannot collect a dollar of the arrears. We believe the paper has done its duty for the party in this county, and should have the unanimous support of all the democrats in the county. It has been so partisan as to drive out and keep out the advertising patronage of half a dozen or more republican business firms, who assert that they cannot conscientiously support a paper which does as much as the JOURNAL does every week to break down their own party. Nearly every week some republican grumbles when paying his subscription that it hurts his conscience to support as partisan a democratic paper as the JOURNAL. And yet there are in this county to-day democrats who give to republican papers more advertising and other patronage than they do this paper. Republicans understand all this, and laugh over it.

The JOURNAL has never belted a ticket. It has supported men who were personally distasteful to the editor, for the sake of party harmony, yet there are democrats who overlook all that and give their support to republican papers for personal reasons. We have supported men on the ticket who not only do not support the JOURNAL but who after election either neglected or refused to pay their legitimate printing bills for slips, etc. We have not a doubt if there was a convention next week, some of them would be candidates, and expect the JOURNAL to give them its support. Like Ben Davis of the Progress, our experience is a mighty inducement to support such men no more.

We should very much regret the necessity of changing the policy of the paper to continue its existence, or of receding from the position of a party paper, and yet democrats must understand that if they have a party paper they must support it themselves, they must pay for it,—republicans will not. If republicans are persuaded to take this paper, it is for other considerations,—for personal reasons, or because they like the local features, or the tone of the paper on local questions.

We hope it will not be necessary to refer to this subject of party support again. Two or three, or a dozen men cannot support a party paper. It must have the support of every member of the party in the county.

CLUB RATES.

To accommodate those of our subscribers who do not have a city paper, and who will miss the general news features heretofore found on our ready-print pages, we will take subscriptions for the JOURNAL and the Detroit Weekly Free Press, until January 1, 1890, at $1.60 per year, Cash in advance.

This is really much cheaper to the subscriber than the eight page JOURNAL was at $1.50, as the Weekly Free Press contains 12 large pages of small type, giving all the news of the state, besides a complete synopsis of the principal domestic and foreign events of the week, and the best stories and miscellany ever published.

At this club rate all subscriptions MUST be paid in Advance in Cash.

WATCH YOUR ADDRESS LABEL.

The time to which each subscription is paid is indicated by the date on the address label, and every person can see at a glance when their subscription expires. The price of the JOURNAL is now One Dollar a year if paid in advance, but all subscriptions not paid in advance will be charged at the rate of $1.50 per year.

Using Them for an Advance.

President Cleveland urges on the democratic fight for low tariff taxes with the advice that "party honesty is party expediency." There is no danger of a misunderstanding of the present attitude of the democratic party on that point. Instead of using its legs for a stationary straddle, it is now using them for an advance on the enemy's works.—St. Louis Republic.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Wm. Meggison, who died Oct. 1st, was 45 years old last May. Her maiden name was Mary J. Simpson, and she was born near Toronto. She married Wm. Meggison, Dec. 16, 1863, in the town of Vaugn, York county, Ontario. They lived fifteen years in Muskoka, Canada, and moved to this county four years ago. She was a loving wife and kind mother, and leaves a husband, six sons and three daughters to mourn. Many friends and acquaintances will extend to the family their deepest sympathy.

The funeral occurred Thursday, Oct. 3d, Rev. B. H. Whitman, pastor, preaching the funeral sermon. He took for his text, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," and spoke very touchingly of her as having lived a Christian life from early childhood and teaching her children from every day life to follow her example. "Forever blessed are they who put their trust in the Lord; our sorrows are all here below, there is none on the other shore; not dead, only gone before." The floral offerings were beautiful, and affectionately spoke of the love kind friends had to the memory of the dead.

Early Christian Idea of Woman.

The doctrine that the family is the unit of the state and of civilization was never handed down to us from the early Christians. It came from heathendom if it came from any source in particular. The contempt in which marriage and women were held in the first centuries of the church is shown in a paper in The Contemporary Review by Principal Donaldson, of the Scottish University of St. Andrews.

It is the prevalent opinion that woman owes her present position, such as it is, and some call it a high one, to Christianity and the influence of the Teutonic mind. Principal Donaldson says he used to believe this himself. Then he investigated it thoroughly and found that not only Christianity in the first centuries did not free and elevate women, but that, "on the contrary, it tended to lower their character and contract their range of activity."

This, coming from a man so learned and so thoroughly Christian as Principal Donaldson, is a remarkable statement. The degradation of woman, however, does not come from anything Christ himself taught. Paul is responsible for it. The Ebionites narrate that Paul was a Greek of Tarsus; that he came up to Jerusalem and met and loved the high priest's daughter and became a Jewish proselyte. He then sought the high priest's daughter in marriage, but was rejected. This rankled in his soul ever after, so that he held a grudge at all womankind. Principal Donaldson says:

> Some have thought that there is a bitterness against women in the writings of St. Paul which can be explained only by some such rejection as that related by the Ebionites.

At any rate, the writings of Paul gave a trend to the woman question in the first days of the Christian church that lowered and depressed women unspeakably, in the judgment of Principal Donaldson.

Great Columbia.

Retired United States Quartermaster General Meigs has been dipping at once into statistics and prophecy in a late number of Science. He has figured out of his head what the population of this republic will be in 1990.

Our people have nearly tripled in number in the forty years since 1850. It is to be considered that since the memory of man this country has grown from a group of manhood we have grown from 23,000,000 to 67,240,000, that being the estimate which Gen. Meigs makes for the 1890 census, which is the eleventh.

The year 1890 is the hundredth anniversary of the year when the first census was taken. Then we had a population of not quite 4,000,000 all told. With what self complacency the Americans of 1850 must have looked back on the poor little 4,000,000 that our country held in 1790. Just so, if all goes well, the Americans of half a century hence will look back on us and our mere insignificant 67,000,000, for in 1940 the country will have 283,282,977, and in 1990, at the same rate of increase, the population of the United States will be 1,206,562,248. At present the total population of the world is popularly supposed to be 1,400,000,000.

Gen. Meigs estimates our growth during the next century at 33.3 per cent. each decade, which is slightly less than it has been during the past century. Beyond a doubt the United States will be the head and home of the English speaking people on the globe. Russia might outstrip us in growth if she had a liberal government and a mild climate, her population being already 103,912,640. But as it is we have nothing to fear from Russia. We have only to stand fast together and march on to glory.

Thibet is a land invested with mystery and romance. There are fastnesses in its mountains that to this day have never been explored; retreats believed by some to be the home of Indian adepts who have conquered the infirmities of the flesh and of mortal mind, and who live on for centuries, like Bulwer's Zanoni. It is interesting to know that a Siberian traveler proposes to explore Thibet thoroughly and find out all that he can about it. He will be accompanied by a Chinese escort and take the route along by the Chinese wall. It is to be hoped he will finally be able to set at rest the question whether there are people in Thibet 500 years old.

The cultivation of vocal music in schools is an excellent method of preventing consumption. Good, strong, well developed throats and lungs will be able to resist the consumption spore that floats through the air and is breathed in. Especially this is true if the children are made to open their mouths freely and form words and syllables with the throat, the tongue, the lips and teeth, instead of back in the throat. By this means the lurking germ so much complained of in the American voice will be completely avoided. Using the voice and lungs in the open air is a noble exercise for strengthening the chest.

There seem somehow to be mysterious natural forces which provide their own means of recovery after great disasters. In the awful floods at Johnstown, in Pennsylvania, from 5,000 to 8,000 lives were lost and $30,000,000 of property destroyed. Yet all this has not even delayed the industrial progress of the Conemaugh valley to an appreciable extent. The Cambria iron works, one of the mast crippled of the wrecked establishments, has declared the usual semi-annual dividend, and the earnings of the railroads leading to that region are largely increased over last year.

In the electric series, in Scribner's Magazine for October, Lieutenant W. S. Hughes, U. S. N., writes of the recent applications of electricity to naval warfare—including such devices as search lights, torpedo detectors, signals, logs, and range finders. Lieutenant John Millis, U. S. A., describes its applications to land warfare, explaining, among many ingenious things, how the velocity of a cannon ball is measured electrically; the operations of the field telegraph in time of war, including the balloon telegraph; and the various forms of electric firing apparatus, mines, and torpedoes. Both articles are fully illustrated.

Railroad Notes.

W. B. Carpenter, son of W. A. Carpenter, traffic manager of the C. & W. M., has been appointed traveling passenger agent of the C. & W. M., D., L. & N. and St. Joseph Valley roads, vice John R. Wood resigned.

The Chicago and West Michigan railroad surveyors were at Spencer Creek yesterday, and a few nights since the advance route lookers stopped with Simon Flewelling on section five of this town.—Bellaire Advertiser.

A couple of D., C. & E. R. R. officials were here this week; there is a directors' meeting at Charlevoix today; the contracts from Harrison to to high water are all signed; and through tickets from Victoria City, B. C., to New York via the D. C. & E. are now being printed. With Ben Davis we say hurrah!—Bellaire Advertiser.

Track is now being laid on the Baldwin end of the C. & W. M. extension at the rate of about a mile a day. The rails used are 60 lb steel. The crossing with the F. & P. M. track at Baldwin has been made, but will be taken up later and an interlocking switch put in. The Baldwin depot will probably be at or near the crossing.

F. J. Meech treasurer, and A. D. Cruickshank attorney, of the D., C. & E. R. R. Co. have returned from New York and were in Bellaire yesterday on business connected with the road. The final papers have been signed and the contracts let for the construction of the railroad from Mackinaw to Harrison, on the line previously surveyed, the conditions being that the right of way shall be furnished, as already agreed to, and a comparatively small amount of other assistance given.—Bellaire Breeze.

A. D. Cruickshank, who has been in Boston on business connected with the Charlevoix railroad, did a little talking at the Cushman house Friday morning. He claims that there is an understanding and agreement between the Canadian Pacific which controls the D., S. S. & A. road of the upper peninsula, and the Flint and Pere Marquette people, by which the link between the Harrison spur of the F. & P. M. and the straits will be built, and the Canadian Pacific thus become possessed of a north and south road connecting their main line in the upper peninsula with Detroit and Toledo. He says that the whole line will be cut out and graded during the winter and spring, and the steel laid next summer.—Petoskey Record.

Speaking of railroads, I understand the grading of David Ward's railroad has been completed to Frederick—some twenty-five miles of track—and that the construction crew have moved three miles west of Alba, on the G. R. & I. to grade northwest of Alba some ten miles, down to the Jordan river, a floatable stream for logs, which empties into Pine Lake at East Jordan. At this place the lake marine will take lumber and other freights to all parts of the lake, or lakes. This will give Mr. Ward five competing outlets for his pine and hardwood timber and lumber. He has four outlets besides the Lake Michigan outlet, as follows: Via the Michigan Central railroad, the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad, the Au Sable river, and, lastly, the Manistee river.—Chicago Timberman.

Special Excursion to Detroit.

CATARRH—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B. For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10oct9

Wide Awake.

General O. O. Howard has written an article for the young folks who read Wide Awake, which will also interest and enlighten their elders; we refer to the little paper in the October number entitled "How many Indians in the United States?" In the same Miss Rose Kingsley, Charles Kingsley's daughter, has a valuable contribution about "The Boy who Invented the Telegraph"—Claude Chappe, a little French lad. Mrs. Goddard Orpen in her "Famous Stones" series, gives a very different page of French history in telling the story of "The Diamond Necklace." After excepting Mrs. White's Public School Cooking paper about dainty preparations for invalids, and the kindred one by Mrs. Cavanza about "Sleep Slippers," and Prof. Starr's "Geological Talk," and Mrs. Claflin's "behavior" letter, the remainder of the number is given up to stories, poems and pictures, all of a most entertaining character; note be among the latter is Mr. Bridgman's amusing Court Calendar and the eighteen Prize Nonsense Animals the most remarkable chapter known of modern natural history. The poems include contributions from Graham R. Tomson, Mrs. Celia Thaxter and Mrs. Whiton-Stone, all at their best. The serials are Margaret Sidney's "Peppers" and Susan Coolidge's "Little Knight of Lakeo." The short stories, all true ones, are "Paisey at Scotia," by Leigh Young, "Niobe" by Anna H. Wayne, "Salem Gibraltars," by Elizabeth Merritt Goose, and "Tom the Star Boy," by Miss Ridey Seward, the latter a tale of Washington and the Rocky Mountains.

Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

SOLACE TOWARD THE SEA.

All Afric, winged with death and fire,
Pants in our pleasant English air,
Each blade of grass is tense with, and
And all the wood's lone trembling hair
Stirr'd to the broad and breathing gale
Of hours whose touch wastes herb and tree.
This bright, sharp death shines everywhere;
Life yearns for solace toward the sea.

Earth seems a mere sepulchral pyre;
The sun a scourge for slaves to bear
All power to rot and mock decay
Lies dead as dreams of days that were
Before the new born world lay bare
In heaven's wide eye, whereunder we Lie breathless till the season spare;
Life yearns for solace toward the sea.

Fierce hours with ravening fangs that tire
On spirit and sense, divide and share
The throes of thought that scarce respire,
The throes of dreams than scare forlorn
One note immitigable prayer
For cold, perpetual sleep to be
Shed snowlike on the sense of care;
Life yearns for solace toward the sea.

The dust of wars where men sunpire
Seems even the dust of death's dim lair;
But, though the freshest days be dire,
The sea wind rears and cheers its fair
Blithe broods of babes that here and there
Make the sun laugh and the moon stare for glee
With gladder flowers than gardens wear;
Life yearns for solace toward the sea.

The music dies not off the tyre
That lets no soul alive despair;
Sleep stirles not dumb the breathless shriv
Of waves whose note bids sorrow spare.
As glad they sing as fed from fair
As when fate's word first set them free
And gave them light and water to wear,
Life yearns for solace toward the sea.

For them, though night and day conspire
To compass round with toil and snare
And changeless waste of change, whose gyre
Draws all things earthwards unaware,
The spirit of their scourge and scorn,
Will waves that follow on waves that flee
Laugh, knowing not yes, though earth despair,
Life yearns for solace toward the sea.

—Algernon Charles Swinburne.

FOLLOWED.

The most desperate and lawless men in the west—people who within few twenty years' experience on the plains—are the gamblers, confidence men and robbers who follow the "end of track" when a railway is pushing through new and unsettled territory.

At every side track a new town springs into existence, so suddenly as to suggest the western expression "dropped there by a cyclone." At each of these new communities the first comers are usually men of the kind I have mentioned.

Along the roadbed, wherever a siding is to be laid, a dozen or more big tents, respectively labeled "Saloon," "Dance House," sometimes very appropriately, "Satan's Hole" or the "Devil's Den," are always found set up in advance of the arrival of the first knives.

A certain harvest awaits the owners of these groggeries, as the "railroader," of a certain class, takes his "time" from his foreman at frequent intervals, in order that he may cash his "time check" at the nearest saloon and gambling place.

He quickly squanders the proceeds of his check in drink and play, or is robbed of them, lies about in a stupid condition for a day or two, and then goes to work again, penniless.

Such a person accepts all the evils of this mode of life—such a philosophy that would be commendable if shown under adversity of a different sort, as shirt, pantaloons, shoes and a sloucb hat usually comprise the whole of his possessions, and so long as he can get the means to satisfy a periodic appetite for drunken excitement he seems to be satisfied with his lot.

This description of a large class of railroad laborers, it should be distinctly noted, does not apply to the many sober, steady fellows who save the large wages they get and often settle and become prosperous citizens in the country they have helped to open to civilization.

It is upon the earnings of dissolute wage workers of the track and grade that the gamblers, confidence men and assassin thrive, and, to secure their plunder, they follow the progress of a new railroad like vultures in search of prey.

The day laborer upon these pioneer roads is not the only victim of the robber and sharper. It is unusual for any man who visits one of their mushroom towns to let the fact be known that he has a considerable amount of money in his possession.

Yet men who know the nature of the dangers about them sometimes neglect to take proper precaution to insure the safety of money in their charge, and thus the writer allowed himself to be caught, two years ago, in a "snap" that came near ending his career, and that taught him a lesson in caution that he hopes will never again be needed, at least by him.

I was acting as paymaster and chief commissary clerk for a firm of grade contractors upon the Northwestern road, which was then pushing through northern Nebraska into the adjacent territory of Wyoming.

We were doing some heavy grading and rock work, and with a large force were pushing the work day and night in order to get out of the way of the track, which had then advanced to a point within a few miles of us.

We had let pay day slip by without paying the men, and hoped to satisfy them by the issue of time checks until the track should overtake us, and our money could come to us with little risk on the construction train. But, three or four days after the "payless" time, some of the men began to grow suspicious and to grumble, and threatened to quit work until their checks were cashed. They were afraid we might somehow slip up on them and they wouldn't get their money.

As we were in a remote part of every available hand, it was necessary that the men should be satisfied. So it was determined that I should go to Chadron, our supply base and banking point, and bring up enough money to pay the men their last month's wages, which amounted to about four thousand dollars.

I wished to go alone. I set out that night on horseback, and I reached the "end of track" at Crawford siding the next morning in time to leave my horse at a neighboring ranch corral, and get aboard a supply train which had just unloaded and was now going back.

At Chadron, the supply store of the main contractor, a huge, roughly built shed stood at a side track about forty rods from the main street of the town. Here I was accustomed to order supplies and get drafts for money from the bookkeeper from time to time.

That morning, after finishing my business with the supply department, I went to the bookkeeper to procure a draft. A crowd of railroad laborers were waiting before his window to get their time checks cashed, or secure passes to go or down the road. I noticed that two of these men were better dressed than the others, but thought nothing of the circumstance.

I awaited my turn at the window, and handed the bookkeeper a slip of paper on which was written, "Four thousand three hundred and forty-seven dollars and fifty cents, Pay Roll—Rodney & Curtis." He made me a draft for the amount named, folded it carelessly, thrust it through the window, and took the receipt which I had just written, and then turned to the next man.

As I left the store I passed the two men whom I had noticed at the window, and it struck me, upon a more attentive view, that they were rather sharpers than workingmen, although I had seen them cash two time checks, and get passes for some point up the road. The construction train did not leave until 3 o'clock that afternoon, and I lounged upon the shady stoop of the Chadron house watching the passers by and chatting with the landlord, who was an old acquaintance of mine when I lived in the east. I had a pleasant dinner with him, and after the meal was finished, I walked across the square to Lake & Haley's bank at the corner of the two principal streets of the town, where I cashed the draft.

The bills which I received I stuffed into various side pockets of my clothes, and scowed a sack of silver change into a small leather "grip" which I carried in my hand.

I heard a locomotive whistle and, turning, walked quickly out of the bank. As I reached the sidewalk, I was startled to see the two men who had before attracted my notice stop rather hastily away from the sidewalk in front of the bank windows, and walk across the street.

I was satisfied that they had watched me as I cashed my draft. My suspicions were thoroughly aroused by this circumstance, and when, an hour later, I stepped into the caboose of the construction train, and discovered the men lounging upon two cracker barrels smoking their pipes, it did not need their evident avoidance of the direct stare I gave them, the moment I entered, to convince me that they were after me.

I now heartily berated myself for not having exercised greater caution while at Chadron. I should have waited until I could see the bookkeeper alone before I obtained my check; and should have had my cash made up by the clerk at the bank, and brought to my room at the hotel, as I easily could have done. But it is easy enough, after you have done a foolish thing, to think how much better you might have managed it.

While I sat upon one of the hard benches in the caboose, with my "grip" lying beneath the seat, I considered how I should dodge the two fellows at Crawford. There was no danger that I should be robbed on the train, as there were at least twenty passengers on board. Presently one of the men sauntered up to my seat, sat down by me, and began to talk.

"Spof" said he. "You've with Rodney an' Curtis, ain't yeh, one o' their foremen?"

I answered carelessly that I was in their employment.

"Paul is' Is goin' up the road lookin' for a rock job. We're strikers. Could yr hire us, d'ye think?"

"Certainly," said I, "we need more men badly, especially good strikers. We will give you two dollars a day, and you can work a part of the night if you like."

Then, as unconcernedly as I could, I went on to tell him about our work, and direct him how to find our headquarters. I told him I should leave Crawford after breakfast the next morning on horseback, and that he and his partner could undoubtedly find a freight wagon there on which to take passage for our camp.

After some further conversation with the man—a young looking, wiry, dark faced fellow—he went over to talk to his "pard," and no doubt they congratulated themselves on his success in throwing me off my guard.

On my arrival at Crawford I went to the company's tent, where food and other supplies brought on the construction trains were stored until they could be shipped forward by wagon to points where our forces were at work. There I explained the situation to the two clerks in charge of the tent, and said that I wished to spend the night with them.

I was armed with a good "six shooter," and the clerks had each a light Winchester rifle. They said we could guard the money without trouble that night, and it was arranged that I should start for the grading camp at 3 o'clock the next morning. By leaving at so early an hour I believed that I could baffle pursuit by any robbers who had conspired to rob me.

My pony—a tough Oregon half breed—was picketed that evening behind the supply tent, and the clerks and I took turns in sitting on guard at the opening of the tent. I saw nothing of the two "strikers" after we left the train, and no suspicious person approached the tent that night. I shifted the silver from my "grip" into a pair of saddle bags, and, armed with my revolver and a borrowed Winchester rifle and a belt of cartridges, mounted my pony at 3 o'clock the next morning to complete my journey.

Day was just breaking when I came to the fork of the trail at Fort Robinson, two miles north of Crawford siding. Both routes led to the grading camp—one trail lay through White River canyon and the other led to my destination by way of Driftwood. One of these routes I just take, and as the men who were "shadowing" me believed that I would proceed by way of Driftwood I chose the White River canyon route, a rough, new trail that for several miles led through a tumbled, rocky gorge or canyon in the bottom of which rippled merrily the little streamlet that is the beginning of the White river.

I urged my pony forward at a good pace until, after sunrise, I passed a camp of freighters who were preparing their breakfast, and later met several wagons on the move, which relieved the loneliness of my ride and caused me to feel more secure. As the morning was hot and oppressive I now proceeded more slowly.

About half an hour after meeting the freighters I halted at one of the numerous creek crossings, and dismounted to drink and eat a portion of my lunch of crackers and dried beef which I had brought from the commissary tent. As I had no cup I stretched myself out upon the rocks at the edge of the current, and buried my nose in the cool water of the spring fed stream.

As I lay drinking, with my head just above the water, a distant sound of horses' hoofs struck my ear. I ceased to drink, listened intently, and soon heard distinctly the tread of horsemen coming rapidly up the canyon.

I sprang to my feet in alarm. My first impulse was to mount my pony and apply the spurs, but as I ran up the racking gallop, was a very slow one, I came to the sudden conclusion that I lodge into the brush and let the horsemen, whoever they were, go by. There were a few box alder trees and several clusters of plum bush close under the rocks on the right. I jumped the bronco's rein, and led him in behind the thickets of these small trees.

I had little time to think or act before the horsemen came up at a gallop, and I peered through the leaves as they rattled on, and discovered that there were six riders and that the foremost strikers were in the lead. They passed my hiding place without any suspicion that I was concealed there, and, though still much alarmed, I was now able to reason that they got wind of my errand, when, just as they rode into the water, my pony lifted his head and uttered a shrill, inquiring whinny.

The party instantly halted. Every rider turned his face eagerly in my direction, and half a dozen rifles and revolvers were jerked into readiness for action. My pony whinnied again before I could get a grip upon his muzzle, and I felt that unless some unexpectedly fortunate circumstance intervened I should lose the money and probably my life. The horsemen were determined, villainous looking men, and as I glanced about I saw they had a great advantage over me. The scattered patches of pine scrub on the steep bare sides of the gorge offered me but little shelter for a retreat, and the bushes behind which I stood were but slight protection against heavy bullets. At the second whinny of my horse the men dismounted and stood behind their animals.

"He's in there, sure," I heard one of them say. "Spread out, boys, an' surround them bushes."

Without waiting to hear any more I drew the Winchester through the tops of a plum bush and fired at their nearest horse, aiming at the body back of the shoulder. The animal went down with a groan, and the man behind it sprang back with a fearful oath.

My only hope now lay in swift action and certain aim. A quick motion of the lever reloaded and cocked my Winchester, and almost before the horse had fallen to the ground I had aimed and fired at the fellow as he turned to run for cover.

He fell, but got up and ran again. Shifting my aim, I opened a rapid fire on the other horses and men. The robbers returned a few hasty and ineffectual shots and then scattered in flight. When I had fired the seventeen shots, which my cartridge belt carried, three horses lay on the border of the canyon, at various points, and one man was down with a broken leg was dragging himself toward the shelter of the creek bank. His companions had fled down the canyon, two on foot and the others on horseback. Three or four of their shots had struck in the bush about me, but none had hit me.

The sudden, fierce determination which had seized upon me, and the swift, effective firing which followed, seem as much a surprise to myself as they could have been to the "road agents," who no doubt believed there was more than one shooter behind the bushes which sheltered me. I dared not stop to look after the wounded man, who undoubtedly would have fired at me if I had approached him. Mounting my pony and keeping as much as possible under cover of bushes, I rode my animal at his best speed up the canyon.

About five miles from the scene of the shooting I came upon a grader's camp, and sent some of the men back to look after the wounded robber and to secure the saddles of the fallen horses. I afterward learned that they got the saddles, but could find nothing of the company's $4 bank notes, which I had buttoned in my shirt, intending to pay my men with them. Relief of Deafness in Old Age.

Sapolini, of Milan, has described a method of his which he states he has successfully employed in sixty-two cases of deafness of old age. It consists in mopping the membrana tympani with a weak cleaginous solution of phosphorus. He claims that the treatment diminishes the opacity of this membrane, frees the "crescents," and thus improves the hearing.—Kansas City Medical Index.

There are several good reasons for the attempt to train swallows for military messages, instead of carrier pigeons. The swallows are swifter and more difficult marks to shoot at. The experiment so far promises well. A young swallow from Roubaix flew home from Paris, 175 miles, in an hour and thirty minutes.

DUMAS, THE ELDER.

His Egotism Paled Before His Great Big Tender Heart.

A speech of Alexandre Dumas has often been repeated, perhaps for the reason that he probably often said it, for I heard him say: "The tripod of French literature today rests on Hugo, Lamartine and me." That he did say it I can attest to, and he said it in dead earnest. It was spoken outright in a company where the literary element was conspicuous, and was received with a hearty, good natured laugh.

For a moment M. Dumas seemed taken aback at the way this speech was received. He did not retract it, but stood still looking at the laughers with an air of amused conviction on his face.

Let me put aside all the egotism in Alexandre Dumas, declaring that for a special style of romance nothing was ever written equal to his "Trois Mousquetaires." Those four gallant swordsmen, Harthos, Athos, d'Arpagnan, Aramis, stand side by side in defense of their creator. If they were simply bullies, or spadassins, they would have lowered their blades long ago. The sparkle of their steel, the merry clink of their rapiers, are continued in their talk. Take a page of dialogue in this wonderful novel, and even the outs and noms have their merit. The humor is a superfluous world. It has all the eloquence of brevity. In the half dozen plots that run through the story there is no stagnation; the strand has its own distinct color, and yet subordinate to the whole. In the joyousness, yet the devil-may-care way it is done, which is the charm, I think that more oil, candles and gas have been consumed over "D'Artagnan Triomphe" than over "Mousquetaires" and "Monte Cristo" together.

A king of Spain, seeing a man laughing with a book in his hand, said: "That fellow is either reading 'Don Quixote' or he is crazy." If you are fond of good sense you will find it is caught in the act of reading some book or other all right, and you are quite certain it is either "The Musketeers" or "Monte Cristo." As to the latter book, I am inclined to believe it has helped to perpetuate the idea of treasure. Thackeray may have made one of his characters, Maj. Pendennis, read Paul de Kock, but the great novelist loved his Alexandre Dumas, and I am quite certain Thackeray's taste was pure, his critical judgment the soundest, and so I believe what he says. Dumas is possessed of the delight mankind, and for the sorrow of grief." As Lang neatly puts it.

Mr. Andrew Lang, with more appreciation of Dumas, has done him full justice. What I should most like to bring into prominence was Dumas' tender, kind heart—or was it his weak head. He was the most charitable man I ever met. It was not half his cloak he would have given to a poor man, but all his clothes. Poverty did not appear to him as crime, but, it may have been lavish, but he indulged in the luxuries of poverty, and not for himself. All his emotional instincts were concentrated in his simple pity. Even in the height of his literary career, when his writings were in great demand and he handsomely cared for, I have known him to sit up all night writing one for nothing but for the benefit of others.

Once I met him a bright spring morning walking head up, erect, along the Marly high road.

"You look happy, M. Dumas," I said.

"I am. I have been up all night, and am going to dispatch this parcel to Paris." He tapped a good sized parcel under his arm.

"But why should you burn your candle at both ends, M. Dumas? You will break down!"

"Ah! hah! Do I look so frail?" he asked, with a merry laugh. Certainly he did not, for he was built like a Kentucky porter. "The fact is, poor S's wife was confined yesterday, and he is in great anxiety over her, and without a sou to bless himself. He is one of the few men I can trust with my money. I know he pledged all his books a week ago. Mme. S. and the child away, and one man with a broken leg was dragging himself toward the shelter of the creek bank. His companions had fled down the canyon, two on foot and the others on horseback. Three or four of their shots had struck in the bush about me, but none had hit me.

Story of a Violin.

Waldemar Meyer, a well known violinist, has bought one of the most valuable violins in the world for $1,250. It was not only made by Stradivarius, but has a history. This "great" fiddle was made for the first George of England in 1716. It was played in the royal family until the death of this century, when it became the property of a Scotch nobleman who valued it so highly that he carried it in his military bag, and thus it was that the instrument was at the battle of Waterloo. His family held it until about 1850, when it came into the violinist Molique. In 1886, when Molique returned to his native Bavaria to pass the evening of his life at Cannstadt, he transferred it to his friend and pupil, Baron von Poellnitz, of Munich, a brother of the Parisian bookmaker. Now it is in possession of the violin for twenty years. He sold it not long ago to the great violin collector of Berlin, Herr Egidius, for $1,000, who in turn sold it to Waldemar Meyer.—Boston Post.

IT is an insult to common sense to affirm that the tariff enhances the prices of wheat, corn, oats, cattle, hogs, horses or mules, poultry, butter, cheese, milk, hay, fruits, vegetables, cotton or tobacco leaf. The price of the farmer's products is fixed by the foreign markets, and the price of nearly everything the farmer buys is determined by the tariff and its incidents. This is an ugly truth but it cannot be wiped out.—Chicago Tribune.

THE Iron Moulders' Journal says: "In New York 50,000 persons walk the street at night for want of a home and as many more are not sure of their breakfast. This is rather a bad state of affairs in a country so large that there is plenty of room for all to have a home and something to eat. Protection fills the dinner pails, don't you see! A few more years of protection and the number will be increased to one hundred thousand. Protection is mighty—to make tramps and millionaires.—Dayton Workman.

IN an article discussing the money market, and the possible chances for a panic, the Detroit Evening News says: "The money market is in good shape now, even if it is a little tight. There are few grounds to fear a panic for although we have been investing pretty heavily of late years, the savings of the nation have largely increased. We might be a good deal better off, however, if we didn't have to bank so much money on compulsion with Uncle Sam in the way of taxes for which he has no need." The last sentence of the above is particularly pertinent.

THE NEW ELECTION LAW.

The attorney general of the state of Michigan has decided that under the act passed by the last legislature all ballots for elections in Michigan, general, local, municipal, or special, —must be printed under the supervision of the secretary of state. The decision is made on a special election for the village of Fenton.

We have not seen a copy of the new law, but if it is made to cover township elections in April, the secretary of state and state printer will have a fremendous job on their hands, with no end of trouble, and township committees will have to hold their caucuses at an earlier date than usual, so as to send their copy to Lansing to get tickets printed.

Mr. Wm. Harris, representative for this district in the house of representatives, gives as his opinion that the bill did not intend to include township elections, but all others. The bill as passed was rushed through the closing hours of the session, and at the time he considered it so loosely drawn and so defective that he voted against it, preferring to continue the old law rather than enact one improperly drawn as this seemed to be.

It is proper that this feature of the law should be thoroughly discussed and decided in time, so that fatal defects may be remedied by a special session of the legislature, or if bad not defective, that townships may make their nominations in time to have their tickets printed and forwarded, and not disfranchise whole townships by the loss of tickets with no time to procure a duplicate supply.

When the attention of the attorney general is specially called to this matter, he may revise his opinion so far as it applies to spring elections for township officers.

Old World Wage-Workers.

So much has been said concerning the "pauper labor of Europe" by people who did not know what they were talking or writing about, that the letters of the American workingmen who were sent by the Evening News to the Paris exposition, telling what they actually saw and heard in England, France, Scotland, Belgium and Germany, is interesting reading. These letters are now appearing regularly in the Evening News and 20 or more largely circulated papers throughout the country. Those that have thus far appeared were written by Mrs. L. M. Barry, Joseph Thorpe and Frederick D. Wheeler respectively. The first was on the condition of workingwomen, the second on locomotive engineering, and third related to ship building. Others will rapidly follow, until the entire 45 delegates have been heard from. The general public, and especially workingmen, should read them all.

We noticed half a score of young men starting for Vanderbilt or thereabout to work, as work is scarce now in East Jordan.

Potatoes are a very good crop this year. Some of our farmers who have 500 bushels yet in the ground will be apt to pick them up with cold fingers. Buckwheat cakes are going to be cheap also.

We acknowledge a pleasant call from Lon Ayliffe (who formerly worked in the mill here) who was on his way to Frederick to work for a few months.

Mrs. Hiram Warner, who has been ailing for some time, is some better. She was able to ride down town on Saturday last.

Mrs. Richer and daughters Mary and Mabel, mother and sisters of Mrs. Ben Healey, Sundayed with her, and have now gone on the excursion to Detroit. Miss Mary expects to spend the winter near there.

A new scion of the house of Tremain arrived at Chas. Cunningham's, where Mrs. Tremain nee Cunningham has been spending the summer. John T. is still in Oregon, where Mr. C.'s people expect soon to go.

Boyne City.

Oct. 15.—Fine weather for fall harvest. Gather your corn and potatoes.

Vessels have been loading at our docks all the past week.

Stephen Hicks, of Ironton, visited his friend, F. M. Chase, last Saturday.

Chas. Lusk moved in the Wygle house on Lake St. on Thursday.

Miss Edith Cole was the guest of Mrs. A. E. Martin on Monday.

A large number of our citizens have taken advantage of the Detroit excursion to visit friends in the south part of the state.

Alfred Boardman, of Stanton, is the guest of A. E. Martin for a few days.

Last Sunday morning memorial services were held in the M. E. church for Mrs. F. M. Chase. Rev. J. Burdge delivered a finely prepared sermon, after which Rev. W. R. Norton gave a touching address to the mourners. Mrs. Chase was an estimable lady, and will be much missed in the community, as well as by her husband and little ones. They have our sincere sympathy.

The farmers have nearly all their threshing done and are busy at their fall work.

Wm. McNally is quite sick with his former complaint.

Geo. O. Scott, who has been sick some time, is still confined to the house.

I. S. Webster returned home last week.

Mr. Dorrance and wife will move to Charlevoix this week, and the new minister, Mr. Morse, takes possession.

The Petoskey made her first trip on Pine Lake Tuesday.

The furnace has been shut down for a few days.

R. Miller is in Boyne City this week.

Jimmie Saunders went to Traverse City last week to visit his father at the asylum. He reports him nearly well, and expects that he will be sent home in about six weeks.

The next meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the residence of Mrs. J. D. Parrish. A good attendance desired.

The Harmonigraph.

An invention hails from New Orleans for which very remarkable powers are claimed. This device embodies mechanism by means of which music, as it is played on the piano or similar instrument, may be indicated on paper so that it may be reproduced as desired, thus enabling one improvising music to have the music written as it is played in such a manner that it may be read and translated into the character ordinarily employed in writing music. The invention is said to consist in the combination in the harmonigraph of the markers and connecting rods arranged for engagement by the keys of the piano or other similar instrument, and by which the movement on the key may be transmitted on the marker. In the combination is also entitled a tone marker and a measure marker. Some of the finest ideas of the impromptu player on the piano appear to be the most evanescent. What composer, while abandoning himself to the flow of happy extemporization, has not longed for some means of catching the exquisite melody or the superb orchestral effect, and recording it before its form and beauty have become impaired and lost? If the harmonigraph can do this, it is truly a wonderful invention, and one which will be received with gratitude by the whole musical world.—New York Telegram.

BEAT MASON.

Lovers of lake trout can soon get out their spoon hooks and trolling lines as the trout will soon begin to run. The writer caught a great many a little later than this last fall in Elk lake. They are a very gamey fish, and it is rare sport to get a six or eight pounder on the end of a hundred-foot line and take them in.—Elk Rapids Progress.

The Michigan Tradesman, of Grand Rapids, says: "F. A. Smith, cashier of the Charlevoix Savings Bank and proprietor of the Charlevoix Cigar Mfg. Co., was in town a couple of days last week. Mr. Smith is a hustler from Hustlerville, being interested in most of the active enterprises of the town."

The boat they are after is none other than the steamer Daisy, at present running between Charlevoix and Petoskey. She is 119 feet long and 19 feet beam. Her cylinder is 18x20, and she is said to be very fast."—St. Ignace News. Wonder if he means the Friant; there is no "Daisy" here.

"Under the Gaslight," by the Petoskey dramatic club at Lewis grand opera house last Saturday night was not favored with as good a house as the play and company deserved. All the parts were fairly well represented, and the drowning scene and "midnight express" were especially well done.—in fact the best of that class of work ever done on a Charlevoix stage. On Oct. 26th the company will present the "Hidden Hand," an old and popular play, in which Mr. Tom Wall will represent "Wool," and Mrs. Tons "Capitola." We hope they will be favored with a full house, as their work certainly deserves it.

MORE GLORY FOR CHARLEVOIX.

A. D. Cruickshank Elected Grand Patriarch of Michigan Odd Fellows.

Round Lake Lodge, No. 223, I. O. O. F., has today the proud distinction of counting among its members the two highest offices in Odd Fellowship in the state, G. W. Crouter having been elected grand master of the grand lodge of the state at the annual session last February; and A. D. Cruickshank elected grand patriarch of the grand encampment of the state at the annual session in Detroit last week.

The following are the officers elected for the ensuing year:

Grand Patriarch—A. D. Cruickshank, Charlevoix.

Grand scribe—E. H. Whitney, Lansing.

Grand treasurer—H. Soule, Ann Arbor.

High priest—Jas. Dean, Detroit.

Senior warden—W. W. Owen, Muskegon.

Junior warden—E. K. Root, Plainwell.

Representative to sovereign grand lodge—Jas. M. Crosby, Springport.

The following officers were appointed by the grand patriarch:

Grand marshal—T. M. Wilson, Lansing.

Inside Guard—E. G. Johnson, Ludington.

Outside Guard—John Robinson, Imlay City.

The Detroit papers mention the procession, the drill, the installation, the award of prizes, the conferring of degrees, and the dance, as events not soon to be forgotten in circles of Odd Fellowship.

The Golden Opportunity.

Charlevoix is without a planing mill. Since the burning of the Charlevoix Mfg. Co.'s factory there is nothing on the lake between Traverse City and Petoskey to take the place of it. It will not be rebuilt; its affairs are to be wound up. Some of the stockholders would undubtless go into a new company, but the most of them are left without available means to rebuild as large as the necessities of the town demand.

They have left out of the ruin an excellent site for a factory which might include a saw mill and general sash, door, and furniture factory. It is estimated that $200 will put the boiler and engine in a condition as good as new, and the power is sufficient to run a much larger factory than the one destroyed.

All this will be sold at a reasonable figure to any man or firm who will build and start a planing mill as soon as possible. Charlevoix needs one now if ever. All building operations are delayed for the want of a factory to make the finishings. With the railroad now building there is a sudden demand for more residences and business blocks, all requiring the work of such a factory, and all are delayed for the want of one. Added to this, a firm with sufficient capital engaged in this an excellent point to engage in the manufacture of furniture. The raw material is at our doors in abundance, and with the two railroads now building to this point, with the waterways which we already have the facilities for shipment, will be equal to the best.

If any reader of this paper has a friend anywhere with available means, they cannot have a better opportunity of investment than this at this time. The factory is a necessity, and its immediate business is sure, to say nothing of the possibilities of enlargement.

Latest Railroad News.

Last Friday night Engineer S. H. Boardslee had instructions from New York to proceed with the work on the south side at once. Mr. Rock has returned from New York with contracts for grading, and the work has been in progress all the week. A dozen or more teams are today at work on the lake front south of the resort. The working force is being increased and new gangs started as fast as men and teams can be employed. The good work is progressing gloriously.

CATARRH—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proven this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three application, made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 16w19

"Forbidden."

The exhibits of machinery and of the industrial arts are in some respects the most interesting and suggestive to Americans of all the departments of the Paris exhibition. The correspondent of The Scientific American commends the excellence of the workmanship of the French and Belgian machinists, while he thinks that in point of design, and especially in light machinery, the Americans are superior to them. Though the exhibitors are very willing to have their machinery examined, and patiently and courteously explain their methods of working, some of them, not wholly unnaturally, show great annoyance if any sketch is made of their machines.

A few days ago I was just beginning to make a sketch of an odd piece of designing, when the machinist, putting the engine together, caught sight of my pencil and note book, and the celerity with which he got up and came over to me put me on my guard, so that I just prevented him from snatching my book out of my hands.

"It is strictly forbidden (Vest also-lument defendre) to make sketches," said he, "and I won't have it."

This, however, was not true, there being no official prohibition of making drawings for scientific journals.

Putting my sketch book away, I bared my cuff, and made a pretense to sketch on it. He was completely nonplussed, and began to look about for an officer. Then I turned to him and asked: "Is it also absolutely prohibited to carry away the design in your head?"

Whereupon I turned my back to the engine, took out my note book, tore out the embodied sketch and handed it to him. He tore it into shreds with great satisfaction, while I, with my back still to the engine, made a side elevation, and a plan of the connecting rod end, for that was all it was, and showed it to him.

He looked at it, called his assistant to see it, shrugged his shoulders, spread out his hands, and said, "Mais qu'est ce que on peut faire avec un ouvrier comme ca?" (But what can be done with such a thief?)

The most laughable part of the whole business is that these men, or many of them, seem to think that Americans want to copy their designs, whereas in a great many cases the things sketched are absurdities from an American point of view.—Youth's Companion.

Saluting with the Hat.

Raising the hat as a mode of salutation is generally acknowledged to be a mark of polite attention.

"Being the easiest part of the European dress to be taken off," says Leigh Hunt, "hats are doffed among us out of reverence. For the same reason, the orientals take off the slippers instead of the turban. Among the Turks, doffing the hat is regarded with extreme disfavor, as it is denoting a servile, if not indecent, humiliation.

Taking the hat off or not taking it off has made more trouble than many people suppose. The Quakers were the first to bring the matter into a legal controversy at the Lancaster assizes in 1656, when the well known George Fox and Chief Justice Glyn were the contestants.

"'Where are you brought into court,' says Fox, 'we stood a pretty while with our hats on and all was quiet; and I was moved to say, "Peace be amongst you."'

The prisoners, refusing to remove their hats, were taken from the court room. When they were again brought before the judge, Fox was asked if hats were mentioned at all in the Bible.

"Yes," said the Quaker, "in the third Daniel, where thou mayest read that the three children were cast into the fiery furnace by Nebuchadnezzar's command with their coats, their hose and their hats on."

As a token of respect uncovering the head is an old courtesy. If we can believe the writer of Will Bagnell's ballad, even the ladies of that time were accustomed to doff the crowning glory of the cranium on some occasions.

The grandees of Spain claim the right to wear their hats in the presence of the sovereign to indicate their higher position compared with the rest of the nation, and the privilege of remaining covered in the presence of royalty has been occasionally granted in England on account of some particular service. A few of the curious documents granting such a concession, and signed by the king's hand, have been preserved.—Boston Globe.

Educational Woodwork.

"Sloyd," a term which is becoming common in educational discussions, is not nearly so formidable as it looks. It is Swedish, is pronounced "sloyd," and signifies a system of wood carving imported from the Swedish schools that stands midway between the kindergarten and manual training. The distinction between sloyd and wood carving, so far as the advocates of the former have made it clear is that, while wood carving is taught chiefly so that the pupil may acquire a livelihood, the object of sloyd is to develop the pupil's faculties, and the use or beauty of what he makes is a minor consideration. Sloyd, too, employs several of the larger carpenter's tools, like the saw, plane, bit and chisel.

The Swedish idea of sloyd is that it shall teach the dignity of labor, and that no toys or ornamental objects shall be made by the pupils. This asceticism is not favored by the American promoters of the study.—New York Tribune.

Not Unlikely.

The Actor—Kin I play the legit? Well, you just give me a chance, and if I don't paralyze you it won't be my fault.

The Manager (coldly)—Let me see—last season you were on the road with the Niagara Ned combine?

The Actor (deprecatingly)—Yes—only a tank drama, but I made a big hit in it.

The Manager (as before)—Ah, yes. I understand—you were the tank.—Drake's Magazine.

THIS PAPER

THEY'VE CUT THE WOOD AWAY.

They've cut the wood away,
The cool green wood,
Wherein I used to play
In happy mood.

The woodman's ax has cleft
Each noble tree,
And now, alas! is left
No shade for me.

The brooks that flow in May
Are dry before
The first hot summer day,
And few no more.

The fields are brown and bare,
And decked with boast;
No more doth tower there
The pine access sweet.

No more his note is heard
To blithely ring
Where erst the woodland bird
Would sit and sing:

No more the wood flowers bloom
Where once they bloomed,
And the emerald gloom
Of forts entombed.

Fled, with the wonted sights,
The scented air!
Fled, all the sweet delights
That once were there!

And fled the gracious mood
Which came to me,
When to that quiet wood
I used to flee.—Boston Journal.

HE CONQUERED HER.

"Ten to one you'll fall in love with her," said Fred Edgerly, energetically.

"I won't take the wager. I don't want to rob you, Edgerly."

"You think you are proof against any amount of attractions after bearing assault and battery from West Point belles for five years and upwards," Edgerly answered, laughingly, as he glanced at the handsome bronzed face of his friend, as they drove over the high road leading from Carmen station to Hurlton Top, where the two men were expected to join Mrs. Hurlton's gay party. "But you have not seen Miss Viner yet; when you do prepare to surrender unconditionally.

"You seem to forget that I am not an impressionable school boy," Lieut. Fleetwell answered with a scornful smile curling his lip under his heavy mustache. "I have seen hundreds of women handsomer and more charming than Miss Viner, I dare say, and I have escaped heart whole, fortunately," he added with a sarcastic curl of the lip, which escaped his friend's notice.

"Fortunately! and why fortunately? Surely when a man is good looking, wealthy and in the army he ought to marry and give hostages to fortune.

"Perhaps he could, if he can," said Lieut. Fleetwell, carelessly.

"If he can! That cool reply to you, Fleetwell. There is hardly a woman in five hundred who would refuse you.

"Is there not? Why do you think so?

"Because you are rich and handsome, in the army, and—and eligible."

"Excellent reasons for a woman to marry me," said Lieut. Fleetwell, a trifle bitterly, "and equally excellent ones to keep me from matrimony," he added, as they turned in at the park gates and drove up the avenue to the old Hurlton mansion. It was a fine day, toward the latter part of September, bright and cheerful and sunshiny, and the grand, stately old brown stone building was looking its best in the haze of golden sunlight.

It was upward of five years since Lieut. Fleetwell had seen his cousin's stately old mansion, and his handsome dark eyes brightened as they drove upon it, and brightened yet more when they fell upon a lady in a picturesque tea gown who came out on the wide stone steps with her cape hands outstretched and her dark eyes aglow with pleasure.

"My dear Jerome, how glad I am," she said, as Lieut. Fleetwell took the little hands in his, and kissed, instead them with a graceful, Old World courtesy which was pleasant to see. "Frank is fishing, of course, but he will be back early. What an age it is since we met."

"It is a long time indeed," Jerome answered in his low, rich voice, "but looking at you, Florence, I am inclined to think it is five months and not five years, that have elapsed since I went to West Point."

"Wait till you see my boys," she said, laughing, as she turned to greet the young collegian with pleasant, cordial courtesy—and the two gentlemen followed her into the hall, a stately apartment in keeping with the exterior of the mansion. "Most of my lady guests have driven over to Bamby's Head," Mrs. Hurlton said, as she led the way across the marble pavement towards one of the many doors which opened into the hall; "Miss Viner and I are alone. Mr. Edgerly, I have good news for you; Miss Dunan is coming to-morrow."

As she spoke she pushed open a door leading into a pretty, dainty, rather aesthetic looking room, where tea was waiting, and which at first seemed to be unoccupied, but as the door opened a lady who was standing by the open window turned slowly round, and came toward them, holding out her hand to Mr. Edgerly, with a smile, which did not blind him to the sudden gleam of intense eager admiration, which flashed into Lieut. Fleetwell's eyes as they rested upon her face

She was very beautiful—there could hardly be two opinions upon that point. She was small, though queen like; and her dress of some soft cream colored material, which fell around her in soft folds, showed the beauty of a figure which was nothing less than perfect.

"Lieut. Fleetwell—Miss Viner," said Mrs. Hurlton, quietly, and Miss Viner bowed slightly, while the faintest tinge of pink rose in her fair face as she met Lieut. Fleetwood's eager, dark, admiring eyes.

Hurlton Top was one of the very pleasantest houses in the country to stay at, for the hostess exercised the greatest discretion and judgment in the choice of her guests, and spared no pains to make their visit an enjoyable one. Mrs. Hurlton was, like many another happy wife, a match maker at heart.

It very soon became apparent to some of her lady visitors that their pretty hostess had designs against the peace of mind of her husband's cousin—and Fred Edgerly smiled to himself as he saw how hopelessly and irretrievably in love his friend had fallen with Miss Viner before many days had elapsed.

September drifted into October. On a smooth lake some little distance from the house an idle boat with idle oars was floating down with the current. The moonlight played at will on the placid breast of the lake.

Such the picture had one been a mere spectator to the mimic scene—but to the two actors surroundings were lost sight of—they thought only of themselves.

Mocking the silver moon when they glanced upward, they see could across the lake and through the trees the twinkling lights of Hulton Top and hear the merry voices and gay laughter of the group on the bank from which they had just escaped. Arch smiles had passed between its members as they saw Dorothy Viner and Jerome Fleetwell stroll off arm in arm to where the little boat was moored.

The women had almost ceased to be jealous of Dorothy, or to ask where lay her charm. When she exercised her fascinations men bowed before her—first from necessity, then from choice.

But, though her victims were countless, she was 24 and Dorothy Viner was 18. However, this time she had encountered her little sister said a female worthy of her steel. What she was among men, Jerome Fleetwood was among women. Therefore, seeing these two brought under the same roof, and thrown into daily intercourse, rumor was rife, and speculation awaited results with bated breath. Meanwhile the little boat floated calmly on the surface of the lake.

"Miss Viner!—Dorothy?"

It was the first word that either had uttered in full ten minutes. She looked quickly up at the speaker. The white knit scarf thrown carelessly upon her dark hair, cut from which peered the beautiful pale face, lent her some of the moon's mystic charm; but meeting the earnest gaze of the dark, magnetic eyes bent upon her, bore fell for an instant. Then, as though ashamed of the momentary weakness, again shot a questioning look into Lieut. Fleetwell's face.

"Miss Viner," he repeated, calmly, "did you know we were in danger?"

"In danger?"

The dreamy look faded from her face, the color deserted her cheek and, shivering heavily, she glanced up at the blue vault where sailed so majestically the Goddess of Night—down into the dark depths of the waters, only to see the silvery moon's brilliancy reflected there, around, noon lady. All was peaceful.

"No," he said, in answer to her look, "not from any of these. The moon, the wind, the water—all are our friends to-night. We are in danger from each other."

"Oh, how she prayed the moon might fail to make apparent the instant rushing of blood to her cheek! She felt it glow like a warm crimson, even while she raised her little head almost defiantly as though to hurl a challenge at his audacity. Men had made love to her in many forms, but always as suppliants. This man dared to place her in equal danger with himself!

"You deal in riddles, Lieut. Fleetwell," she returned, coldly. "I am accustomed to plain speech."

"Rather say that plain speech is to you an unknown tongue, and that I am the first man who has dared to speak frankly. Would you have me speak plainer still? You shall have your wish. A week longer under the same roof with you, a week more of your power to use fascinations and my ship would go to wreck and ruin on the bar; unless—he leaned nearer, and his voice grew softer, more full of tender feeling, and his hand fell on hers very lightly, but with strong grace—unless, Dorothy, you would let it float your pennon and guide it into the safe harbor of your love."

She had been wooed many times, and in many climes, by many men, but nothing had ever moved her as this wooing, on this moonlight night in October. Yet this soldier—this man—dared to tell her that in another week this all might come to pass.

Others had sworn to go from her presence to put an end to the existence she had rendered miserable, or had vowed that beneefeorth woman's smile would be gall and wormwood, or pleaded that she had shorn their manhood of its strength and rendered their life a burden.

This one did none of these things. While his strength yet was his he saw and met the danger.

"A week hence," she said to herself bitterly, "and the flame might singe him. Now his wings are all unscorched. He does not say: 'I love you!' In time I might love you! Was he then to win so easy a victory? Never!

"Let us go home," she interrupted in a constrained voice. "It is growing cold."

"Dorothy, is this my answer?"

"Your answer," with an assumption of surprise. "I was not aware of any question."

"Dorothy, I did not have even this excuse. Will you be my wife?"

His voice was hoarse and stern, and his grasp tightened on her hand.

"You hurt me, Lieut. Fleetwell," she complained petulantly, making an effort to withdraw her fingers.

"Answer me, and I will be released her.

"Let me! I hurt you," he returned courteously, and took up the oars. "Pardon me," he continued, "I will not do it ever again."

A few bold strokes and the boat's keel grated on the shore. Ten minutes later and the two reappeared at Mrs. Hurlton's beautifully appointed salon. On the parterre beyond shone the red light from a man's cigar. It was still there, still gleaming when she had gone up to her own room. She crossed to the window to pull down the shade, but stood a minute, fascinated, motionless.

"After to-night he will forget me," she murmured, sadly. "And I—I shall remember him—forever!"

Then, as though a sudden truth had burst upon her, she threw from the shade, to throw herself, with a quick, impetuous motion, upon her knees, and weep the first heart tears she had ever shed.

"It is all over—Miss Viner has refused him." This was the general verdict, when, twenty-four hours later, Jerome Fleetwell bid his friends adieu, and withdrew to town on plea of sudden business.

The news soon reached Dorothy.

"I have not refused him," she said aloud; "not even that satisfaction is mine," she said to herself—"nor ever will be! It was only 'the might have been.'"

He was not a man, she knew full well, to plunge desperately into flirtation, or associate his name once with another woman's, or to retire later or rise earlier or in any way disturb the even tenor of his way. The difference between them was only this—his heart was healing, perhaps already healed, but he would bear its scar to the grave; hers was a festering sore, which hurt the more she had let the physician who might work its cure pass her by.

The summer wanes to a close. Autumn had touched the mountain and hillside into a glorious beauty of brown and red. Then came winter's lagging footsteps, mercifully bearing the eye still. However, this shroud of snow to cover up all signs of devastation and ruin.

The season in the gay world was at its height. Occasionally murmurs among the debutantes for its honors were at the fact that, though Miss Viner's fifth winter, her former success paled in its most effulgent light. She and Lieut. Fleetwell constantly met. She almost wished he might avoid her, but at their first chance encounter he had approached with outstretched hand.

"How charming you are looking, Miss Viner," he had said. And all in vain she had watched for some change in his tone, or a shadow of embarrassment in his manner.

"Only a week between him and shipwreck," she thought, bitterly. "Oh, he has sailed so far from the fatal rock that doubtless he would now laugh at its supposed danger—and I—I was weak enough to think he stood upon the precipice's brink?"

The new year had come, and one evening Dorothy stood alone in her father's drawing room, looking out at the fast gathering darkness, when suddenly the same shade she saw a figure pass and mount the steps. "A visitor," she uttered, wearily; then waited the inevitable announcement she knew must follow. But spite of her every effort, she started when the servant, throwing open the door, called out 'Lieut. Fleetwell!' Oh, how glad she was that the rooms were not lighted as she went forward to receive him!

"May I welcome you in darkness?" "As you will," he answered. "I have but a few moments to stay. I came to bid you good-by and to ask you to bid me bon voyage."

"Bon voyage. You are going abroad?"

"Yes. I sail on Thursday. I hesitated about calling, but my desire to see you for the last time was too strong for my manhood. I ought to ask pardon my audacity in supposing my presence could be enough moment to make it worthy a special call."

"My friends are always welcome. I did not suppose it necessary you should hear that repeated now."

"Nor is it. It was only a morbid fancy on my part which induced me to question it. I shall come back, I trust, with my mind clear. At least I shall be some years older. When I return I presume I shall look for Miss Dorothy Viner in vain, until I find her in some mansion, equally charming. I cannot imagine her old and spiritless."

"So he could speak this lightly of her becoming the wife of another man! And he was going away; she might never again hear his voice nor see his face. It was too cruel! He and fate were too strong for her. The tears gathered in her black eyes, but the darkness hid them.

He rattled on—she had no need to speak. Then he rose to go.

"Good-by, Miss Viner"—he took her hands in both his—"Good-by! God bless you!"

Was it her fancy that just at the last his voice trembled?

He crossed the room; in had gained the door. Another instant he would be gone; another instant he might be too late.

"Jerome!" she said softly.

Two strides, it seemed, brought him back to her side.

"You called me, for what? To make my going harder?"

"Oh, is it hard! In mercy tell me, my own heart is breaking!"

"Your heart is breaking! Dorothy, Dorothy! what does this mean?" But the doubt of her sobs was his only answer.

"Dorothy," he continued, "can it be that I have judged you wrongly? Look up, my darling! Is it your wish that I should stay?"

Then she found her voice. "I thought you did not love me enough," she murmured. "But stay, if you must go take me with you.

"I will," he answered her simply as he folded her in his arms.

A month later a great steamer moved slowly out to sea, and as they stood on the deck, hand clasped in hand, with the salt breeze blowing lently in their faces, it bore them away into the placid beauty of the coming night, toward the Old World and the new life.—Walter I. Blakey in New York Graphic.

The function of a negro's binex skin is supposed to be the conversion of the sun's light into heat. The best thus generated remains in the skin and does not penetrate to the deeper tissue. Being thus provided with a sun proof armor, the negro can stand an amount of heat that would be fatal to a white man, and he runs hardly any risk of sunstroke.—New York Telegram.

THE NEW YORK STAR.
A Daily and Weekly Newspaper.
PROSPECTUS FOR 1889.

THE STAR BUILDING.

The New York Star passed into the hands of new managers in November last, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of it.

During the first months of the change the improvement made in it was so pronounced that it came to be recognized at once as

A Live, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the freshest of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are crisp, positive and bold. Its Democratic principles are so pronounced and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, on its recent reorganization, selected it as the medium for placing its official action and utterances before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in nation, state and city; and is the advocate of no individual or the organ of no faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York city on Sunday. The matter selected for the literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest merit and reputation. Their united contributions each Sunday would make a volume as large as Harper's Magazine, and treating of many more subjects than any monthly magazine published ever discusses. The whole at a cost of only 3 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in many respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a compact, condensed, practical, important news of the week carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in detail. Space is given to the class of literature most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to interest the women of the household. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but it does put him in the general news of the world, leaving the home paper of such subscriber to supply the practical information on all agricultural topics. It is an excellent paper, therefore, to obtain, through favorable arrangement, in place of the weekly printed in your immediate locality.

TERMS.

For the six months from July 1 to Dec. 31, 1889, we will send the paper free from postage to any new subscriber not now a subscriber to the Weekly Edition of the Star, at the following rates:

Every day, six months	$3.50
Daily, without Sunday, six months	3.00

THE same organs which reject personal or official honesty when compared with dirty partisan work, will approve the methods of Zack Chandler, whether employed in Louisiana or Montana.

By the throwing out of one precinct with a large Democratic majority, the Republicans of Montana gain enough members of the Legislature to give them a majority on joint ballot, and enables them to elect two United States Senators. Thus by a mere technicality a number of voters are disfranchised, and the will of a majority is overthrown. And this the Republicans count as honorable politics.

Is the death of Capt. Plettenpace, of Bear Lake township, Charlevoix county losses one of its most honorable citizens, the board of supervisors a faithful and conscientious member, and the democratic party one of its most hearty supporters. Every man favor, dwith his acquaintance loses a friend, for he was a friend to every person with whom he had business relations or even a brief acquaintance. He was a man whom it was a pleasure to know, and one who will be much missed by his old neighbors, in the work of his township, and in the councils of his party.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society, held last Thursday at the secretary's office, it was decided to hold the sixth annual fair at East Jordan, the second week in October, 1890. The premium awards were approved as reported by the several committees of divisions, and those gained by members of the society were ordered to be paid.

We are of the opinion that the date fixed upon for the fair next year will just about hit the nail on the head. This year we bluffed the rainy period, but the show of fruit, etc., suffered from an attack of previonsness. October, we predict, will find both bills well filled.

CATARRH—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B. For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this newtreatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10ow19

JOSH BILLINGS' AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

A Brief Document Written in a Book Store Twenty-two Years Ago.

That quaint humorist, Josh Billings, penned the following letter in Carleton's book store in this city more than a score of years ago, and forwarded it to his literary friend, Mr. Bowen, of Fort Plain:

"DEAR CHARLES: If you can git me a few kalls to lekture out your way it will be clever in you. Sorry that I have no pictorial biography of my face to send you; the fact is that I allmost cussed humbly that I can't be took. I have sent to England for one of the Book Billings. Those publishers are worse than resurrectionists—they steal a man while living. I ought to have had at least $500 from the London publishers, but never had a cent. My lektur on milk has been skimmed for 17 yeorrs tuttle. There ain't anything in it that need make anybodly faint away, and I believe there is some nervous truth in it.

"As regards the catastrophys in my biography thus far, I can only state that I was born in Massachusetts, between two mountains, in the year 1820. At the age of 15, the first business I attacked was the wool business—driving sheep. I had never been away before, and everybody seemed to know more than I did. I saved myself, but lost the flock of sheep pretty thoroughly. At 16, I brought up on the west bank of the Mississippi, even in them days quite a stream. The past thirty years have been divided, multiplied and substracted in and among the various schemes of a vagrant temperament supplanted in a strong natural constitution, such as husbandry in the wilderness, where there was more wild bees to hunt than cuts to cut, merchandizing at the forks of a mud turnpike with a stock of brogan boots, Lowell calico, and whisky by the quart; running a high pressure steamboat on the Ohio river—a lively life, where man can see human nature with the bark on, and learn how to swear with great precision. Also speculated in West India stores and potash, the two first crops of a new country; an auctioneer, and for eight years a land hunter on Indian trails, and made tough by rubbing a hog skin saddle and eating acorn fed pork and corn dodgers.

"My life had been a success thus far, for I am still alive, but pecuniarily, who ever made money by playing the eccentrick wanderer from one rude location to another but little better than a common trapper and honey and venison hunter? I have had much comfort out of all this, and would not take the best farm in the state of New York for the sights I have seen. My literary raid has been short but sweet. I have had as much fun out of it as any man who ever lived, and when I reflect that it is but little more than five years since I first put comic on paper, I can certainly feel that if I have not made much coin, I have the quiet satisfaction of knowing that I have never written a line in malice against the truth or virtue of the world. I might have gained more wisdom by singing in a cloister, but would have missed the larks' wild song in the morning and the sober hoot of the midnight owl in the wilderness. I was never sick all day in my life; never saw a man in a tight spot but what I was willing to loosen the screws; have lived among the high and the low, and never put on my vest pocket a knife or a pistol. Because this if it looks like egotism. I only mean to brag on the joy the world has furnished me. Yours kindly,

"JOSH BILLINGS."

"Wait Till I Get You Home."

She was an intelligent, cultured, motherly looking lady, a good church member and a teacher of a Sunday school class, but she looked in well simulated amazement at the street car conductor when he passed her back fourteen cents in change for the quarter which she had tendered.

"Yes'm; one fare and two half fares," explained he.

"Two half fares?" she murmured, questioningly.

"Yes; that boy's more than 5 years old."

"I'm 7 years old," volunteered the youngster in question, as if he thought his testimony would straighten out matters.

His mother blushed perceptibly, but, woman like, she would have the last word:

"I never paid for him before."

"Oh, yes, you have, ma," quoth the terrible infant, very anxious now to establish his claim of being a big boy.

His mother settled back in her seat, her face the battle ground of emotion. But the boy spoke again:

"Quit nudgin' me."

His mother whispered something in that boy's ear that settled him.—Buffalo Courier.

Home and Sparrow.

A curious scene was witnessed in Palace yard, Westminster, England. A sparrow was picking up the corn which had fallen from the horses' nosebags, when a mouse appeared and proceeded to dispute with the sparrow his right to the dainty morsels. A fight ensued, which lasted for some minutes, and then the sparrow beat a retreat. The sparrow had evidently been injured in the battle, and for a time was unable to fly. At last the sparrow flew up, and a column finished the incident by killing the mouse with a whip.—Exchange.

Venetian Glass Makers.

Chambers' Journal notes a terrible circumstance in connection with the Venetian glass industry, and that is that after many years of work when the workmen are between 40 and 50 years of age they begin to lose their sight, and, after a short while, are wholly blind. There seems to be no remedy for this unfortunate state of things, for many protective devices have been tried without success. The blindness is caused by the excessive heat and also by the glare of the never ceasing flames from the glass furnaces.

BENT MASON.

The board of supervisors have voted to buy the Perkins abstracts for $6,500. The mere mention of this recalls some of the unpleasant rumors at the time of the burning of the county records, when the abstracts were controlled by the party or firm sometimes known as the "Big Four."

Henry Barth, the boiler maker, has built for Lewis opera house a new style of heating furnace which he calculates will give more heat to the rooms than any of the small furnaces so far introduced, and at less expense. The experimental trip of the Northern Michigan Line steamer City of Charlevoix, to Owen Sound with 500 tons of flour, feed and provisions for the Canadian Pacific, is believed by Manager Burke, of that line to presage a Canadian Pacific steamship line into Chicago next season. If successful they will do much toward establishing the proposed line.—Evening Wisconsin.

"Last Wednesday evening the parlors of our retiring pastor, Rev. D. O. Ball, were suddenly entered by a jolly gang of his Petoskey friends. It was planned for a surprise and proved a perfect success as shown by the peculiar look upon the faces of both pastor and people. After the customary hand shake and greetings had been exchanged, and whilst sitting amid the happy group which had gathered about them, Mr. and Mrs. Ball unexpectedly found themselves listening to a few appropriate words with which a beautiful silver cake basket and pickle castor was presented to them in the name of those whom they had so faithfully served. After listening to their response we adjourned to the dining room, where we found a sumptuous repast awaiting us, of which we all partook with a relish. Then followed the social interview which was enjoyed so much by all present. Mr. and Mrs. Ball leave behind them a large circle of tried and faithful friends who part with them reluctantly but bid them godspeed. May God bless them in their new field of labor and prove them the same powerful instruments in His hand for the salvation of souls and upbuilding of the spiritual life, as they have been here."—M. E. S. in Petoskey Record.

Death of Capt. E. C. Plettenplace.

Capt. E. C. Plettenplace, one of the pioneers of this region, and a highly respected citizen of Bear Lake township, Charlevoix county, died on Sunday morning, Oct. 20, at 5 a.m., after a long and painful illness. Captain Plettenplace held many places of honor, and for many years at the time of his death was supervisor of Bear Lake. He served in the Mexican war, for a term in the regular army, and through the whole of the war of the rebellion, rising to the rank of captain. He was a member of Col. Lombard Post G. A. R., and a detail of comrades went from here to the residence and accompanied the remains to Clarion yesterday, where the interment took place with the impressive ceremonies of the order.—Petoskey Record.

Godey's Lady's Book.

The November number of Godey's Lady's Book is here on time, as usual. Godey is always ahead in all its departments, and this month shows up with an especially good number. The publishers promise a real Xmas number for December, when a new and powerful serial will be commenced, entitled "$5000 for Wife." This promises to be of rare interest, founded upon incidents in real life. Any person sending their address and two cent stamp will receive a cut paper pattern free. Send 15 cents for sample copy to publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., and see the attractions offered in the prospectus for 1890.

More Diphtheria.

A six year old son of Chas. Chalonp, ka was taken sick in school last Friday, and was allowed to go home. On Tuesday Dr. Lewis pronounced the case diphtheria, and on Wednesday afternoon the child died. Fears of an epidemic are entertained, and if any more cases appear the school will probably be closed.

Our citizens should aid the health officer and physicians in quarantining every known case, and do everything possible to prevent a spread of the disease.

The cast is a strong one, and the ladies and gentlemen connected with its production assure an interesting evening's entertainment. The price of admission will be, lower floor, 35 cents; gallery, 25 cents. No extra charge for reserved seats, which are now on sale at the usual place. Fire at Ironton.

The store and residence of John Peterson, and the residence of I. G. Waldron, at Ironton, were burned last Saturday afternoon. Peterson saved most of his goods, and Waldron saved nearly all. There was no insurance.

Demorest's Magazine.

Great foresight was shown by Demorest's Monthly Magazine in publishing, ten years ago, when an International Exhibition was then talked of, a map of the identical site that has now been chosen by the New York Committee for the World's Fair of 1892. In the November number of this famous Magazine (just issued) this plan is reproduced, handsomely executed, and on extra fine paper. It includes all the buildings and the laying-out of the grounds, and, to make it more comprehensive, a map of New York City is also given. The description that accompanies these designs gives a better idea of the site than anything that has yet been published. Everybody should possess this number, if only for this feature. The same enterprise is shown throughout the entire Magazine. "Women Novelists of America" contains some fine portraits of those with whose names and books we are so familiar. The opening chapters of a serial ("Fiend or Fool"), by J. H. Connelly, are given, promising to develop into one of the best of that well known author's wonderful stories. An interesting article on "Pearls" is beautifully illustrated by J. Carter Beard; and there are, besides, numerous other excellent articles and stories. Fine illustrations constitute a feature of this Magazine; and in the November number there are over a hundred of them. It is certainly the cheapest $2.00 Magazine in the market. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th Street, New York.

THE FISHER.

The water rushed, the water sighed,
A fisher sat thereby,
And watched his angle on the tide
With thoughtful, patient eye.
And as he sits and as he waits
The flood's broad beacon parts,
And thence—her garb in damp hung plaits—
The river spirit starts.

She sang to him, she spoke (a time
"What! wouldst thou so dishonor
With human skill and cunning grim
My marvelous fairy home?
Ah! couldst thou see how well it is
With them so cool below,
Down woulds thou come to share their bliss
And joy's real meaning know.

"The sun and moon both rest here
Within the sea's calm deeps;
And how in time with fairer face,
Each from its cavern leaps.
Dost not thy heart the glory stream—
The water like mirrored sky—
And wonder then and here like to dream
While worlds and ages die?

The water rippled, the water sighed,
The waves his feet caressed.
He faints as though a new sun bride
Lay on his longing breast.
She sang to him, she spoke to him,
His form passed from the shore,
He sank beneath the river grim,
And came to life no more.

He never had a chance to tell
Of that eventful day;
Of all the mighty fish he caught,
Of those that got away
But, if such were each fisher's fate,
How much of fancy's range
Mankind would lose in wordless tales
Both picturesque and strange.

—From the German of Goethe.

HER LAST CARPET.

The clothes line, stretched from the June apple tree to the mulberry tree, and on to the great oaheart cherry tree in Mrs. Gideon Huff's back yard, had for several days flaunted strips of bright green, orange yellow and dark crimson cotton, new ly dyed.

On Monday there appeared several yards of pale blue, and on Tuesday a strip of bright red. When Mrs. Huff hung the last strip on the line, she stepped back with her bare, round, red arms akimbo, nodded her pink sunbonnetted head to and fro in an approving manner, and said:

"Well, I've had good luck with ev'ry single piece. If I'd make the aniline dye a leetle mite darker, it'd mebbe looked better along with the green an' yeller in the twisted stripe I calilate on having, but it'll look mighty purty as 'tis. I must git my logwood an' copperas ready for the rest of my rags, an' git 'em all ready for the rag sewin' Friday, for they've got to go to the weaver a Saturday."

Mrs. Huff's rag carpets had taken the first premium at the county fair every autumn for three years, and she was laying her plans again this year to capture the blue ribbon and the five dollar prize. She had a way of getting up "twisted stripes" and coloring and warping the chain that no one could imitate. Her neighbors often said that they would rather have one of Harriet Huff's twisted rag carpets than a two ply ingrain. She made a great point of having her rags cut very fine, and sometimes lay awake at night planning something new in the way of "bit and miss fillin'."

"She cuts up our duds fer carpet rags 'fore we've hardly wore 'em out," said Mr. Gideon Huff, a little irritably.

"When a woman gits to makin' rag carpets a man's red flannins ain't safe a minute unless he puts 'em in the bank in his own name, an' my best overalls gin'rally go into a ball of carpet rags 'fore I've wore 'em a dozen times."

The carpet Mrs. Huff was now making was to eclipse all of her former efforts. She had actually dreamed of something new in twisted stripes, and had risen in the middle of the night to make fast and safe the dream-sent idea by winding the colors in the right order around a strip of pasteboard. Then she went back to bed, saying to herself:

"Now, if I could only dream a something new in fillin'!"

But such a dream did not come, although she was a great dreamer, and stoutly maintained that she often "dreamed out things," and that her dreams came true. Being thus a firm believer in dreams, she occasionally gave invited dreams by overloading her stomach at night.

"If I eat an ordinary light supper," she said, "I don't dream much; but if I eat pickles and cheese and cake, and a lot of stuff of that kind, I dream a night," which was no doubt true.

She "made a rag sewin" that week to finish up her hit-and-miss rags, but the rags for that wonderful stripe were all to be sewed with her own hands. Eight or ten of her neighbors came to the "rag sewin'." Each of them brought her needle and thimble, and sewed carpet rags and laughed and gossiped in the most agreeable way all the afternoon, and in the evening their husbands came to supper.

Not even to those ladies did Mrs. Huff disclose the pattern she had "dreamed out" stripe, although she informed them that they could confidently expect to see such a rag carpet as they'd never before seen, when the fair opened two weeks later.

Her household duties occupied her more than usual at that season of the year, so that she could sew only at night, and each night she sat up until very late sewing on the green and crimson and yellow and blue and black and white rags for the stripe in her carpet.

It was after midnight on Friday when the last bell was sewed and wound and weighed and ready to go to the weaver's on the morrow.

"The stripes can't be improved on I jest know," said Mrs. Huff, as she put the rags away in stout grain bags, and tied them up. "But I can't decide jest how to have the colors in the chain warped, or whether to have the light and dark rags all mixed up or ev'ryte in the bit an' miss part. I do wordar if I can't dream it out to-night! I'm all tired out, and I dream best when I'm that way. Mebbe if I eat a big piece of gooseberry pie and a piece of cheese 'fore I go to bed, I'll dream something uncommon.

"I read the other day of a great poet who wrote half a poem, and couldn't finish it to suit him, and he went to bed and dreamed the other half all out as plain as day, and got up in his nightgown and finished up. I'm sure if a person could dream out a fine poem, I'd ought to be able to dream out a common rag carpet pattern."

Thus reasoning to herself, Mrs. Huff ate her pie and cheese and went to bed, and, being very tired, soon dropped asleep.

She was sleeping heavily when her husband called her in the morning. Her first words when she arose were:

"Well, it didn't do any good. I didn't dream anything about that carpet, although I did dream of forty other things. I must hurry up my work, and have Gideon take me and the rags over to the Widow Watts', and see myself that she understands just how that carpet's got to be wove."

But when, two hours later, she went into her little sewing room to get her rags and chain, they were not to be found.

"Gideon," she called to her husband, who was putting the horses to the light wagon in the barnyard, "have you carried them rags out to the wagon?"

"No," called back Mr. Huff; "I ain't seen your old rags. I'll be glad when I have seen the last of 'em, and you've done a-settin' up o' nights a-puddin' over 'em, and underminin' your constitution and your health."

"Well, they ain't here," said Mrs. Huff, "and I left them here last night, all ready to be carried out. Hanner, we you seen them rags?"

"No," replied Hannah, the hired girl, "I ain't seen a solitary thing of 'em."

"That's queer," said Mrs. Huff, irritably. "They never tuk legs and walked off of their own accord. Sam, I don't spose you've seen anything of my rags?"

Sam, the farm hand, happened to pass the open window at that moment. "Rags, Mis' Huff? Mis' Huff, what rags?"

"Why, my carpet rags."

"Didn't know you had any," replied Sam, briefly, as he went unconcernedly on his way.

Then began an active search for the rags. Mr. Huff was called in, and so singular was the disappearance of such bulky articles that he joined in the search with considerable interest.

"It's the queerest thing!" said Mrs. Huff, for the fifteenth time, as she looked into places in which the bags of rags could not possibly be. "It's my opinion," she said at last, "that somebody has stolen those rags. They must have done it! They never got away alone; any one with common sense knows that."

No trace of a thief could be found, but one could easily have come and gone without the family knowing it, as the doors and windows were seldom fastened. In fact, some of them had been left wide open the night before to admit the cool air at the close of a hot day.

After an hour of unavailing search Mrs. Huff dropped wearily into a chair and said, in a choking voice,

"Well, they're gone, and gone for good, and so's my chance of getting the prize at the fair next week. Somebody must have stole 'em. I reckon now that Calisty Horn will get the premium with her carpet."

"Well, well, what if she does?" said Mr. Huff, consolingly. "You've had it three years hand runnin', and you'd ought to give somebody else a chance anyhow.

"They all have just as good a chance as I've had," replied Mrs. Huff. "And the premium isn't nothing at all compared to the loss of that carpet that I had calilated sure on putting down in the setin' room this fall."

The rags were not found in the days that intervened before the fair, and Mrs. Calisty Horn's carpet did get the first premium.

"And such a looking carpet as it was," said Mrs. Huff, somewhat spitefully. "The rags was half an inch wide, and she'd got too much copperas in her coloring, and the stripe was nothing to compare to what mine would have been."

Her hope and defeat weighed heavily on Mrs. Huff, and she lay awake a long time thinking the whole matter over after she had gone to bed, when she came home from the fair.

Sometime after midnight Mr. Huff awoke to find himself alone in bed, and as he opened his eyes he fancied he saw some one pass the door leading into the hall.

"Harriet," he cried, "is that you? There was no reply.

"I wonder," he said, "if that woman has got up in the dead of night to begin on another carpet. She shan't do it! Harriet, what are you doing? You sick?"

Still Harriet did not answer. Mr. Huff arose, wrapped a quilt around him, lighted a candle and started out to investigate. As he stepped into the hall he heard a noise as of some one moving around in an unused attic room above him, a room that had not been entered for weeks, and which was now filled with all the odds and ends of things that will collect in a house as the years go on, and which a great many people save, under the impression, usually a delusion, that they will sometime "come handy."

Among the useless rubbish stowed away in Farmer Huff's attic was the frame of an old carpet loom on which Mrs. Huff had woven many a carpet in her younger days, but years had passed since the loom had been in use. The moonlight streaming in through a window showed Mr. Huff that the attic door was open, but there was no other light in the room.

"Harriet Huff," he called, "what in creation air you doing up there at this time o' night? Hunting some more tormented old rags? Come right back to bed! You'll get your death o' cold roamin' round at night!"

She took no notice of his querulous remarks, but he heard no more sounds in the attic. But he was too much troubled to let the matter rest as it was, and accordingly mounted the stairs and entered the attic room. There he saw something that caused him to open both eyes and mouth with amazement.

At the old loom sat Mrs. Huff in her night clothes. In one hand she held an old wooden shuttle, which with the other she fumbled around in a grain bag full of carpet rag balls leaning against a post of the loom. Drawing forth a ball of the "bit an' miss" rags she slowly began winding it on the shuttle, which she then passed to and fro through an imaginary warp. The reed and batten bars were gone, but Mrs. Huff went slowly through the motions of using them.

The amazed Mr. Huff at once noticed that her eyes were closed, and his belief that she had become a "stark, staring, crazy loonytie" changed into the more agreeable thought that she was simply soundasleep. His eyes rested on the missing carpet rags, and he mentally ejaculated:

"Brought 'em up here herself in her sleep two weeks ago! My land! What's goin' to become of her if she goes to makin' carpets both when she's asleep and awake! Her intellectuals reason will give way. That's what'll happen to her! No love winds can stand it, and it'll be mighty hard on all of us. She shan't make any further carpet! I'll buy body brittles for ev'ry room in the house first! Harriet Diary Huff, wake up and git to bed where you belong!"

Mrs. Huff did not waken, and Mr. Huff hesitated before speaking again.

"They say," he said to himself, "that it ain't safe to wake us sleepwalkers or somnambulances suddenly. Mebbe she'd have a fit if I woke her, though she don't come of a fitty family. I'll just see what she does."

A moment later Mrs. Huff slowly left the loom, and with eyes closed shut the attic door behind her, walked down stairs and returned quietly to her bed.

"It beats all," said Mr. Huff, as he quietly laid down beside her; "but she shan't meddle with carpet rags no more, she shan't."

In the morning she said while dressing, "I dreamed 'bout weaving me a carpet at my old loom last night. I reckon sev'ral such dreams lately."

"Harriet," queried Mr. Huff, drily, "That reminds me that I want to show you something in the old loom room. Come right up!"

"Wait till after breakfast."

"No, I've got more than now."

"There you air, Harriet Huff," said Mr. Huff, dramatically, as he threw open the attic door and waved his hands toward the bag of rags.

"Gideon Huff!" she said, as she sank down on an old hair trunk and stared with her hands spraddled.

"I'd say 'Gideon Huff' if I was you," he replied; then he went on solemnly, occasionally shaking his finger toward her. "Harriet Diary Huff, I ain't got much to say to you, but what I do say is solemn and perticuler, and I mean it.

"You've made your last rag carpet. Your intellectuals reason is givin' way under the strain of it, so you nothin' of our duds lein' out yup fores they've half wore out, and you in a stiddy pickle and slow cover your colorin' and twisted stripes. You drug them rags up here in your sleep, and las' night I fetched you up here goin' through weavin' motions in your sleep. Your medal brain powers is becoming exhausted over carpet rags, and I'm goin' to give 'em to the moths an' all premiums or no premiums."

So Mrs. Huff, greatly shocked even at her performances, did give up all rag carpet making, although the beautiful twisted stripe of her vision and dreams became a reality as soon as the rags could be carried to the Widow Watts.

Dream provoking food at midnight was also wisely given up in obedience to Mr. Huff's demand that his wife should do nothing to impair her intellectuals reason."

This is a true story, and the reader can draw the moral from it.—J. L. Harbour in Youth's Companion.

A Believer in the Divining Rod.

We have this week received a serious application from, now about three years, and apparently same on other points, for the address of a maker of divining rods, or of the possessor of the secret, or of the right to manufacture of the method of manufacture. He gravely informs us that his brother possesses one, but will not let him have the use of it, wishing for himself the job in prospect, namely, hunting for gold in Canada. We are also informed that if the body of mineral be large it will affect the rod from a great distance; that the operation is fatiguing, by reason of the sensation communicated to the arm when there is much mineral about; and finally, that the rod will not work in every one's hands. The last proposition, being the one solitary statement in which the innumerable authorities on the subject agree, may be safely believed to contain at least a partial truth.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

Lesson in Pronunciation.

The correct sound of the vowel u is among the niceties of English pronunciation, but after all it is not half so important as politeness, a fact which a certain small boy seems to have forgotten.

"Mr. Featherly," said Bobby, at the dinner table, "how do you pronounce d-o-e?"

"Do, Bobby," replied Mr. Featherly, indulgently.

"How do you pronounce d-o-e?"

"Do-ee"—and Mr. Featherly put on a genteel air for the benefit of Bobby's elder sister.

"Well, then, how would you pronounce the second day of the week?"

"Tuesday, I think."

"You're wrong."

"Wrong! How would you pronounce it, Bobby?"

"Monday."—New York Times.

For Knocking Down a Preacher.

During the occupation of Paris by the allies, Wellington gave an order that no English officer should give a challenge to, or accept one from, a French officer. A French marshal, shortly after this order, shoved an English colonel from the pavement into the street. The Englishman knocked him down. When the marshal made a formal complaint the duke sent a written reprimand to the colonel and in it inclosed an invitation to dinner.—Saturday Review.

LAUGHING AND CRYING.

Show These Outward Signs of Joy and Sorrow Affect Human Nature.

"I suppose the most prominent cause of laughter," says Dr. William A. Hammond, "is a sudden revolution of the emotions—that is, a change from one emotion to another, especially when the changes are of a pleasant character. Thus, for instance, when we have been reading something rather calculated to excite grief and we come to something of a ridiculous character our tendency is to laugh, while if we had the ridiculous idea thrown at us probably we would laugh at all. Then we laugh at attempted wit rather than at true wit. True wit excites pleasure, but does not produce laughter, as does buffoonery. We laugh at the antics of a clown, but not at the sayings of Moliere."

"What is the immediate cause of laughter?"

"It is the reflex action excited by the causes I have mentioned acting through the brain and nervous system upon the respiratory muscles throwing them into spasmodic action. Laughter is a spasm of the respiratory muscles, accompanied by a relaxation of the muscles of the face and sometimes by the shedding of tears."

"At what age do people laugh the most?"

"I think it is not often the case that adults men laugh. They smile, but laughing is in greater part confined to women and children. A mere child laughs readily, and an elderly person who has long passed the middle of life is very apt to laugh at slight causes. This, however, is dangerous for them to do, as they may bring on apoplexy or drop dead from some heart disease if they indulge too immoderately. I have known several instances of death being brought on in this way by a serious disturbance of enfeebled faculties will laugh at certain things which would not excite the rational mind of a man in the full vigor of his mental powers. A very curious circumstance connected with laughter is that, especially with children, and sometimes with women and frequently with old people, the visible expression of the emotion does not correspond with their real feeling. They laugh when surprised. I had a patient once who laughed whenever he saw a funeral. He meant to cry rather than to laugh. There was another who laughed immoderately when he read the obituary columns of a newspaper. He said he did so because he felt so sorry. He would laugh from two to ten minutes at a time before he could control himself."

"Do not ignorant people laugh more than the educated?"

"Yes; that is because they have not been so accustomed to control their emotions as are people of refined life. But the reasons for laughter are more intricate. I have a patient who has over a solemn French book he is reading. He laughs over it in a most amiable manner, and what he laughs at I cannot imagine."

"What are the facts in regard to crying?"

"Weeping, the shedding of tears, is rarely indulged in by adult men of right minds for causes of real sorrow. Old persons, women and children, weep more at ill-ordered minds do not. Man does not weep as a rule under pain; he may groan, but he does not shed tears, though children and women will do so often on slight occasions."

"What produces weeping?"

"Generally physical pain. Adults do not usually express sympathy for real suffering with tears. It is a very curious thing that men will witness the real suffering of a poor woman, having her leg amputated in a perfectly stoical manner. They go to the theatre, and seeing a girl taking the part of an orphan, shed copious drops of the salty fluid."

TAKE A RECEIPT.

Whenever a payment is made on subscription in wood or produce, we want every person so paying to call at the office and get a receipt for the money. Unless this is done, no credit will be given on the books. Unless this is done, mistakes and misunderstandings are almost sure to follow. Please remember it.

The Cadillac News and Express has adopted the cash-in-advance plan and gives the following reasons for doing the same: We have learned by long and patient experience that any other plan of conducting a newspaper than that of receiving payments in advance from subscribers, is sure to be accompanied by losses which in most cases lead to complete business collapse, sooner or later. We have not met such collapse sooner and we do not wish to meet it later."

MONTANA was carried by republican money last year. This year the election was held under the Australian system, to prevent bribery and ballot-foxing, and the democrats carried the state. But the infamous scoundrels who run the republican machine are determined to defeat the will of the people in one way or another, and are trying to elect a republican senator by counting out democratic members of the legislature.—Petoskey Democrat.

OUR temperance friends who have so fondly clung to the republican party so many years ought to realize pretty soon that they have nothing more to hope for from that party, especially when the vice president, Hon. Levi P. Morton, takes out a license to run a high-toned saloon in Washington, almost in the shadow of the capitol. Put this latest move with the evasive and worse than use less liquor legislation in Michigan the last two or three sessions, and it ought to convince most anyone that the republican party is not an honest temperance party.

HARRISON had been president only seven months before his own city, Indianapolis, which had been in the hands of the republicans for thirteen years, was carried slick and clean by the democrats, and Montana, where Harrison's boy, Russell, lives, and is trying to be United States senator, and which went solidly republican last fall, went democratic this fall. Where the Harrisons are best known they are most unpopular, and four years from now the whole country will have become thoroughly acquainted with Harison's broken pledges, blunders and hypocrisy.—Petoskey Democrat.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE for November contains another African article—a valuable addition to the notable papers of Professor Henry Drummond and Joseph Thompson; a discussion of some starting problems in International law affecting the United States in the event of another European war; the description of an old Spanish university by a well known novelist; an explanation of electricity to health by a high medical authority; an army surgeon's account of the modern Sanitary Corps which relieves the sick and wounded; and interesting essays, fiction and poems. Most of the articles are richly illustrated.

OUR recent editorial on party papers and party support has been copied and endorsed by a large number of our exchanges. The Charlevoix JOURNAL makes it a text for a sermon to the democrats of that county, claiming that they do not support the paper as they should. We have no doubt the Journal tells the plain facts, and it is no credit to Charlevoix county democrats, either. They never can succeed in that county until they have just as good a paper as the republicans have, and they can't have that when it is only half as well supported. Wake up! democratic neighbors of Charlevoix and give the JOURNAL a boom.—Petoskey Democrat.

CATARRH.—Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully. 10oct9

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from the first dose. She continued its use and after taking ten bottles, found herself sound and well, now does her own housework and is as well as she ever was. Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store, large bottles 50c. and $1.00. 2

Gardner, hardware merchant, same town, says: "Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. Only 50c. a bottle. For sale by F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 2

New Use for Cocoanut Oil.

It is found that cocoanut oil is not only an excellent lubricant, but it is of great value for lighting purposes. A Frenchman in Cuba has established a factory for the manufacture of this oil. He has imported the most perfect machinery in order that the oil produced shall be as pure as possible. The oil is very fluid, oxidizes slowly, and is said to keep long without turning rancid.—New York Telegram.

Undertow and Overtow.

The old sailor sat on the stringpiece of the South street pier gazing sedately at the swirls in the water alongside as the tide swept out, when a young man of his acquaintance came along.

"Well, Jack," said the young man, "what are you thinking about?"

The old man looked up at the questioner, looked over toward the next pier, where, as he would have said, "a weery plump and sizable young woman" was sitting on the corner of a lighter cabin, and then back at the young man.

"Write for th' papers, don't yer?" he said.

"One of them."

"See that young woman over there?"

"Yes."

"Ever see one like her down to Coney Island?"

"Yes."

"Hearn on 'em gittin' outside the life lines an' drowndin'?"

"Yes."

"What should you say carried of 'em beyond the life lines?"

"The undertow."

The old sailor snorted.

"Sonny, I'm seven readin' that 'ere nigh to fifty year. However could the undertow carry her out and she on ten feet o' water? Don't ever you be no ary such bilge water."

"What takes her out, then?"

"Ever see a chip or stick in the surf?"

"Yes."

"Ever see it wash up on the beach?"

"Yes."

"Ever see it go out to sea instid?"

"Yes."

"Did you ever happen to notice the wind them 'ere time?"

"Not particularly."

"In course not. Nobody as hadn't had the advantage of a reg'lar education at sea never notices important circumstances like the wind. There never was no such thing as undertow to hurt nobody. It's the overtow. It's the gentle suffer as is blowin' off shore what carries the unfortunits outen their depths an' drowns 'em afore the swimmin' eyes of their friends. broken relations what's powerless to render 'em any aid whatever, 'cause there would never no cold tomatoes and spiled animals come for to yes sea shore boardin' house boxes if there was any sech thing as undertow for to carry of 'em off."—New York Sun.

Sandeburg's Strength.

Writing of Tritanus, the Samnite swordsman, whose son carried the giant with a single finger, reminds one of the remarkable stories told of Sandeburg, King of Albania, whose swordsmanship has never been excelled. Sanderburg was born in the year 1414, and grew up to be a splendid specimen of physical manhood. His strength of arm was the most extraordinary that has ever been known. His sword arm was much the larger and stronger, but even the smaller of the two, the quaint account says, "was gigantick inn its lordly proportions, being as much as two lappes around it." A lappe was 12½ inches, which would have made the biceps of Sanderburg 24½ inches in circumference, or about one-fourth larger than the arm of John L. Sullivan. It is to be regretted that the measurements of the sword arm of this Tiania king are unknown, as they must have been proportionally "gigantick in their lordly proportions."

With his cimeter he was known to leave a man from the top of the head to the waist at a single blow. It is related that when in battle he frequently cut his antagonist in two at one sweeping stroke.

Balaban and his horde treated the Albanians with indignities unbearable. Some of them were finally caught and convicted. Among the felons were two relatives of Balaban himself, a brother and a nephew. Sanderburg took it upon himself to execute this pair. The order was given that the king would lop the heads off these two felons in the palace court yard. Before the hour of doom had arrived, while the fathers and son were taking leave of each other for the last time, the enraged king rushed upon them and as they were embracing let fall one stroke severed their bodies above the hips, the mass of quivering flesh all falling in a heap. This extraordinary exhibition of strength of arm has never been equaled by swordsman, ancient or modern.—John W. Wright in St. Louis Republic.

Lucky Knapsack.

Some soldiers find it hard to throw away their valuables even on the most strenuous marches. A private of the Twenty-seventh Massachusetts was a man of this class, and had often been laughed at for his peculiarity.

One day, during a full while the army was before Vicksburg, Private H—— was sitting in the shade with his back to his enemy, about ten feet from where Gen. Stannard was standing.

His knapsack, to which he had clung in all our movements in spite of the jeers of his comrades, was strapped upon his back. A six pound shot came ricochetting along the ground. He picked himself up in a dazed manner, and began feeling first in his head and then of his knapsack, and when the boys assured him he was all right, he responded only with a sickly smile.

Gen. Stannard noted his condition, and to "bring him to" exclaimed:

"That's a mighty lucky knapsack, boy!"

"Yes," said H——, "and I always carry it."

After that it was useless to argue the knapsack question with him.—Youth's Companion.

BERT MASON.

Charlevoix is putting on airs now that, with G. W. Crouter as Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, she has A. D. Cruickshank Grand Patriarch of the Grand Encampment of the same order. He was elected to the high post in Detroit a couple of weeks ago.—Petoskey Record.

In view of the conflicting stories concerning the suspension of work on the railroad, it may be proper to state that Mr. Rock writes that he will be here in a few days and completes his sub-contract and settle his affairs satisfactorily. His difficulty does not affect the general contract at all, and will not interfere with the building of the road, although the delay is very embarrasing to the men who hold the pay-orders for labor already performed.

An exchange observes that the increase in the demand for scrap books is attributed to the newspapers, which will now be furnishing the cream of whatever is best in a literary, scientific or historic way. There has been a marked elevation in the tone of newspapers in the past six or eight years, showing a steady rise in moral as well as literary excellence, so that it is not to be wondered at that readers are so anxious to preserve the gems appearing in the course of a year, which, unless cut out and saved, would vanish as quickly as do the single copies of a newspaper. Everybody should have a scrap book.

The C. & W. M. engineers were in town last Friday, having driven from Elk Rapids. It is presumed they were looking up the feasibility of the shore route for their road from Elk Rapids to Charlevoix. We have good reasons for believing that the company will build on that route if any inducements are held out. The grade is easy, and the lay of the land favors the hauling of a large body of timber to the lake shore,—easier than away from it, as the contrary route would us (Norwood, Eastport, and Torch Lake) can work up a little tangible enthusiasm they may succeed in getting connections with the road both north and south. Is it not worth trying?

The Michigan State Sunday School Association, whose pleasant and profitable session at East Saginaw last winter are recalled by hundreds of Sunday School workers, is planning for another large and enthusiastic gathering at Grand Rapids, Dec. 3, 4 and 5. It is confidently expected that Brethern Jacobs and Reynolds of Illinois will be present to aid by their wise counsel and stimulating addresses, and also that brother E. O. Excell of Chicago will lead the singing, while some of the best talent of our own State will be called into requisition. Further particulars respecting the coming meeting and programs will be furnished the public in a few weeks.

Another Sensation.

On Wednesday this town was stirred to its centre by the finding of a rough coffin in Round Lake. It was towed ashore and opened, and found empty. What became of the body? A quilt and some trimmings were examined by a squaw and said to have been placed in the coffin of a squaw who died in Hayes about three weeks ago. It was the general belief that the grave had been robbed, and if the thieves were not discovered other graves would suffer like desecration. But now comes M. J. Stockman and says the coffin is the one Miss Lulu Willard, a victim of the Champlain disaster was brought from Cross Village in, and after she was placed in a casket by undertaker See, the old coffin was shoved under the edge of Stockman's building then used as a morgue where it has lain unnoticed until Wednesday morning, when he shoved it into the lake.

AMIABLE BARBARIANS.

Anecdotes Told About the Famous Russians Tolstoi and Melikoff.

From the czar down to the humblest mujik the Russians are more or less barbarians from the point of view of the refined west, but certainly most amiable barbarians so far as foreigners are concerned. Their hospitality knows no limits; no trouble is too great when it is a question of obliging a foreign visitor; but, charming as they are, you are constantly being reminded of the wildness of their real underlying nature by the strange contrasts of delicacy and brutality, of civilization and barbarism, which their daily life offers. To hear the Russians talk about the unwritten contemporary history of their social and national life is like listening to the stories of "Arabian Nights." The true narrative of Skobeleff's career and death, and the true narrative of the circumstances of the assassination of the late czar, are far more thrilling and extraordinary than pric; has ever told.

As an example of the strange contrasts of real Russia we will cite two anecdotes that were related to us by a distinguished official, whose intimacy was certainly not to throw dust in our eyes, or even to astonish us beyond measure. The conversation happened to turn on Loris Melikoff, the famous chief of the dreaded "third section." The emperor, we are told by our informant, had given Loris Melikoff unbounded power to act against the Nihilists, and had virtually created him vice emperor, as Melikoff himself used to call it. Now, Melikoff had discovered that one of the leading Nihilist chiefs was in the habit of frequently visiting count Tolstoi, the novelist, and one day he went out to Tolstoi's country house. Before the visitor had announced himself, Tolstoi recognized him, and said:

"You are Loris Melikoff, chief of the third section. Do you come to see me officially or as a private man? If you come officially here are my keys; search; open everything. You are free."

"I come not officially," replied Melikoff.

"Very good," answered Tolstoi; and calling two mujiks, he said to them: "Throw this man out of the house!"

The mujiks obeyed Tolstoi to the letter, and Loris Melikoff had to accept this treatment, for in his way Tolstoi is mighty more than even the Russian people he is an exceptional being, being more than a saint, and almost a savior.

The mention of Loris Melikoff brought up another anecdote. Some twelve years ago the emperor sent for Melikoff and announced to him that the plague was raging in two villages of the empire, and ordered him to do whatever was needful with a view to stopping its progress, and the same time giving him unlimited powers.

Forthwith Loris Melikoff went first of all to the minister of finance, informed him that perhaps he should require a great deal of money in order to carry out the emperor's command, and demanded a credit of 50,000,000 rubles. The minister of finance made a long face, but was unable to refuse. Loris Melikoff then posted to the villages in question, and having observed the situation, telegraphed for twenty fire engines to be sent from the neighboring towns, for the pumps charged with petroleum, and ordered the firemen to approach the villages by night, inundate the cottages with petroleum, set them on fire, and save nobody. The order was executed; the cottages and their few hundred inhabitants—men, women, children and cattle—were burned to ashes, and these two villages disappeared from the map of Russia and from the registers of the empire. The measures was radical, but it stamped out the plague effectually. Loris Melikoff therefore reported to the emperor that his commands had been executed, and then called on the minister of finance to tell him that out of the credit of 50,000,000 rubles granted to him he had spent only 200 rubles to buy petroleum, and that consequently his excellency the minister could dispose of the balance.

In both these stories, which we have reason to believe to be literally exact, we find that curious mixture of the grandiose, of ostentation and of barbaric recklessness which are characteristic of the Russian temperament.—Theo. Child in Harper's Magazine.

CLOSE WORK WITH A SAURIAN.

Man and Alligator Sank Together, but the Reptile Came Up Bound.

The following are particulars of an adventure Mr. H. Abbott, of indigo and racing fame, met with some years ago.

It was in the rains, and we were up at Tewanee Bungalow vats, when the jamadah told us that there was a huge alligator under the bridge of the river. Sending for a gun and a couple of bullets, we went up to the bridge, and, sure enough, about twenty yards off, there was an enormous "ghurial," some twenty feet long with his head just visible above the water. A well directed shot caught him between the eyes, and the brute, mortally wounded, plunged into deep water, rolled over, and was carried by the tide down toward the bungalow, which was a quarter of a mile off. Running to the vat house, Abbott seized a long rope lying there, and rapidly made a slip knot in it, and, declaring that he was not going to lose so lovely a skin, kicked off his boots, and just as he was—in socks, breeches and shirt—jumped into the river, giving me and a lot of natives the other end of the rope to hold. He got well into the middle of the stream and was quietly treading water while we were all anxiously watching, when suddenly within two feet of the swimmer the alligator plunged straight up out of the water amont foremost, as alligators generally do when hit in the head. Without the least hesitation Abbott flung both arms right around the snout, and a regular rough and tumble ensued.

Presently the brute's whole body appeared. Abbott calmly mounted him, evidently trying the while to disengage the slip knot, which had got tight round his own arm, and to shove it over the brute's head. Then the alligator started swimming and we followed down the bank when, just as we were opposite the bungalow, he pulled dead up, brought his tail out of the water, and with a fearful side sweep capsized Abbott, snapping at him as he fell. Then came another fight such as I never wish again to see, the pair eventually disappearing beneath the water. We hauled away at the rope, thinking it was still attached to Abbott, when unexpectedly we saw him come up a few yards from the bank, evidently almost senseless. A Rajpoot peon jumped in and dragged his master up the slope. He was bleeding awfully and was a grewsome sight—shirt in ribbons, arms and chest torn all over, both hands badly maimed, and the right foot completely crushed. He came to at once, and only said: "The rope's safe over his nose;" and so it was, sure enough; for the natives to whom I had thrown the rope were busily engaged in holding the defunct saurian in shore.

I never saw a man in such a mess; and, to add to the horror, down to the edge of the river, just as we had dragged her bal killed husband, rushed his young wife, wringing her hands, and naturally half out of her wits with terror. She was standing over him, and the servants were carrying him to the house, he started singing, "Home they brought her warrior dead." A nice time of it we had out in bungalow, with applications to tie the severed arteries, and with a patient who would insist in trying to get out of bed to see how the skinning of the alligator was getting on. We tried to hire kahars, but the whole country was under water, and they refused to budge from home; so we put him into a shampoy and took him in to the doctor at Monkfferpore, taking from 10 on Tuesday till 7 the next morning to do the twenty miles. —Civil and Military Gazette.

Beast and Bird.

At Hartford, a big, fierce rat, which had been caught in a wire trap, was thrown into a barrel, and then a cat was dropped in. Instead of killing the rat the cat lay down and went to sleep, and the rat curled up by her side and slept too.

AT Vienna a thunderbolt struck a hollow tree in George W. Eaton's pasture, and killed forty-seven black snakes, whose home was in the cavity. The biggest snake was six feet and eleven inches long, and the smallest two feet and four inches. Another bolt fell in the yard of Hiram Green, in the same town, and killed eight chickens, which were huddled together. The necks and legs of the chickens were broken.

A pigeon was seen flying through Water street in this city, a long cord dangling from its leg. Then the cord was caught about a telegraph wire near the roof of a tall building, and the bird hung head down over the street. Letter Carrier Case scaled the building and released the pigeon.

Two Danbury sisters fired a charge of bird shot at a hawk who was carry ing off a chicken, and killed the chicken. The hawk got away.—Norwich (Conn.) Special.

Real Abstraction.

"Master Smart," cried the teacher, "I want you to put your mind on your lesson." "I would gladly do so," replied the boy, for it was in "put at present I am absent minded." The teacher stood by his side a moment, and then brought the ruler down on the place where the lad's brain's ought to be with a resounding whack. "You mean," said the great instructor, "that you are rapped in thought." And without coming to a vote the committee rose, and shortly after the house adjourned.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

Our Country's Future.

Or Great National Questions, is the title of Mr. Halberton's new book, treating of some of the more important social, political and business questions of the day. The work embodies the opinions of more than one hundred of our national leaders, and is, on this account, of much more value than ordinary interest. Not only in what he has written, but also in bringing together the opinions of such eminent men as Bishop Foss, President Harrison, Ex-President Cleveland, Cardinal Gibbons, Dr. Wayland Hoyt, Talmage, Conwell, Bishop Potter, Powerty and others, concerning these vital topics of the day Mr. Halberton has done the public a good service. We understand that the book is to treat of taxation, divorce, the rum power, labor, national taxation, our coast defences, speculation, scores of the city poor and other topics that would naturally have a bearing on the present and future prosperity of our people.

This volume will give the reader a vast fund of information on all these subjects that are frequently coming up in the newspapers and periodicals; and the man who reads it understandingly, will find himself well informed on all these important questions of the day. Notoriously this, but he will have his information from the most reliable source. The authorities quoted are eminent in Church and State, they have devoted years to the study of these subjects, and their suggestions and notes of warning should be carefully read and heeded by all who are interested d in the results and prosperity or the stability of our country. We know of no other book that will contain so much info rmation or information on these topics.

Mr. Haberton is a popular author and bright journalist, and, all in all, this volume will be found exceedingly interesting and suggestive. Sold only by subscription.

A GYPSY WEDDING.

The Simple Ceremony by Which a Zigeuner Couple Are Made Man and Wife.

One day a troupe of gypsies halted in front of the Bohemian Mill, a snug looking mill, situated in the Viennese suburb of Nussdorf. An old man with a flowing white beard got down from one of the carts to inquire of the ale company and inquired of the host whether a gypsy wedding could take place there, adding that they would pay well. At the same time he exhibited a paper establishing his identity as Butura Simi, captain of a gypsy tribe mustering forty souls. The party were invited to take up their quarters in the garden attached to the premises. Presently the hostess ventured to inquire in which church the ceremony would take place. "Thy garden will be our church," replied one of the band, "and our captain is our priest." In a short time the gypsies got comfortably settled, and the men with little trouble erected seven tents, two of them being pitched a short distance from the five others.

In these two tents the bride and bridegroom resided prior to their wedding. The five others accommodated the remainder of the party, which consisted, in all, of twelve men, fifteen women and thirteen children. The first evening was spent in carousing at the inn. The next morning the men surrounded the bridegroom's tent and drank his health with brandy. The women assembled at the bride's quarters and ate sweetmeats with her. On a signal given by the captain the whole party withdrew to their tents.

At midday they trooped out again in holiday attire for the marriage ceremony. Capt. Simi wore a dark green dolman thrown over his shoulders and a red waistcoat with large silver buttons. He advanced slowly toward the tents. Two young men fetched the bridegroom, while the bride was assisted by two old women. Presently two bassoons struck up a Zigeuner melody, sung in chorus by all present.

The bride and bridegroom were then led before the captain. Yemra, the bride, is a handsome girl of 17, with eyes and hair as black as jet. She wore a red gown with white trimming and patent leather laced boots. Kalin Gyefer, the bridegroom, is a well built youth of one-and-twenty, with a pleasant face, a black mustache and bushy hair. A yellow scarf was handed by an old man to the captain, who bound it lightly round the wrists of the happy pair, saying, as he did so, "Hand and all this mind be bound together."

He then took an earthenware jar and poured the contents—a small quantity of wine—over their heads, reciting words to this effect: "Some times wine is sour; so is life. Sometimes wine is sweet; so is life. The existence of Zigeuners is a mixture of sour and sweet." He then took off the yellow scarf and said: "Ye are now a true Zigeuner couple."

This brought the ceremony to a close. The young people were congratulated by their companions, and afterward they all adjourned to the public room of the Bohemian Mill, where feasting and merrymaking occupied the rest of the day. The company left three days later, the newly married couple traveling in a commodious new cart, a wedding present from Capt. Simi.—Vienna Cor. London Telegraph.

Medieval Belief in Miracles.

It is not easy for a modern Protestant, still less for any one who has the least tincture of scientific culture, whether physical or historical, to put, bare to himself the state of mind of a man of the Ninth century, however cultivated, enlightened and sincere he may have been. His deepest convictions, his most cherished hopes, are bound up in the belief of the miraculous. Life was a constant battle between saints and demons for the possession of the souls of men. The most superstitious ones on modern consciousness turn to supernatural agencies only when natural means have proved inefficient; to Eginhard and his friends the supernatural was the rule, and the sufficiency of natural causes was allowed only when there was nothing to suggest others.

Moreover, it must be recollected that the possession of miracle working relics was greatly coveted, not only on high but on very low grounds. To a man like Eginhard, the mere satisfaction of a religious sentiment was obviously a powerful attraction. But, more than this, the possession of such a treasure was an immense practical advantage. If the saints were duly flattered and worshiped, there was no telling what benefits might result from their interposition in your behalf. For physical evils, access to the shrine was like the grant of the use of a universal pill and ointment manufactory; and pilgrimages there to might suffice to cleanse the perfumers from any amount of sin.—Professor T. H. Huxley in Popular Science Monthly.

Unlucky to Kill a Robin.

There is a widely spread belief among schoolboys in many parts of the country that it is unlucky to kill a robin, and it is generally supposed that a broken limb would be the probable punishment for so doing. For the rest of this bird is comparatively safe, though why it should be thus favored is not quite clear, unless, as has been suggested by some writers, it owes its popularity to the story of the "Babes in the Wood," which ballad perhaps may also have given rise to the popular notion that the robin will cover with leaves or moss any dead person whom it may chance to find. There certainly, however, seems to be no substantial reason why he should be more favored than the other members of the feathered tribe, for, after all, he is a very pugnacious and impudent little fellow; but perhaps these are the qualities which have brought him into notice and made him popular.—Chambers' Journal.

Food Mamma—What are you drawing on your slate, pet?

Little Bell—I was tryin' to draw my dolly; but I dess I'll tall it a tlelling pitt.—New York Weekly.

Flaubert's Method.

As for me, the more I feel the difficulties of good writing, the more my boldness grows. It is this preserves me from the pedantry into which I should otherwise fall. I have plans for books the composition of which would occupy the rest of my life; and if there happen to me, sometimes, cruel moments, which well nigh make me weep with anger (so great do I feel my weakness to be), there are others also when I can scarce contain myself for joy, something from the depths whereon me, for which voluptuous is no word, overflows for me in sudden leaps. I feel transported, almost inebriate, with my own thoughts, as if there came to me, at some window within, a puff of warm perfume.

I shall never go very far and know how much I lack; but the task I undertake will surely be executed by another. I shall have put on the road some one better endowed, better born for the purpose, than myself. The determination to give to prose the rhythm of verse, leaving it still veritable prose; to write the story of common life as history or the epic gets written (that is to say, without detriment to the natural truth of the subject), is perhaps impossible. I ask myself the question sometimes. Yet it is perhaps a considerable, an original thing to have tried. I shall have laid my pebble upon the mass of my obsequies. And who knows? One day I may find a God's motif, an air entirely within the compass of my voice; and at any rate I shall have passed my life not lightably, often with delight. Yet still it is saddening to think how many great men arrive easily at the desired effect by means beyond the limit of conscious art. What could be worse built than many things in Rabelais, Cervantes, Molière, Hugo? But then, what sudden thrusts of power! What power in a single word!—Cor. Gustave Flaubert.

Wholesome Food.

Those who are spending their powers in providing entertainment for the young imagination, whether through any irresistible inclination to write, or through need of the money thus brought in, have a tremendous responsibility, which many of them do not seem in any way to recognize. If it is in the first case that they are prompted to write, they should be very sure that they have something to say worth saying, and in no wise detrimental to the young spirit in its formative process; and in the latter they should be doubly watchful of their pens, the temptation of profit and their own need coming in as powerful allies of possible evil, or blinding them to the presence of such evil.

Not only should that which they provide for the young be free from wrong, or the suggestions of it, or from anything that might, perad venture, develop into wrong, but it should be aggressively in the other direction, not only innocent but useful, sound and strong and true and healthy. By demanding the true we do not mean to exclude fancy and imagination, but that even with their employment the tone should ring true, and that all false sentiment should be frowned at as much as false fact, by which is intended statement of fact not true to nature. While the marketman and the previous dealer are feeding the body, the writer is doing much toward feeding the soul, and a good deal of the worthlessness of an impoverished spiritual nature, an imbecile, poorly nourished, poorly developed intellect, may be laid at the door of whomever it is who furnishes intellectual pabulum of poor quality.—Harper's Bazar.

Air in Water.

The phenomenon of air in water, and the fact that in compressing water the air is not forced out has long been an interesting subject of scientific study. The simple explanation being that water, as well as many other liquids, has the property of absorbing various gaseous substances without thereby increasing in volume, and far from reducing the capacity of the liquid to absorb a certain gas; the application of pressure increases it, the law being substantially that the amount of gas absorbed increases directly as the pressure increases, and contrawise. Thus, if water at ordinary atmospheric pressure will absorb one-fourth of its volume of air, at two atmospheres it will absorb another one-fourth, at three atmospheres still another fourth, and so on.

The capacity of water thus to hold large volumes of gaseous substances under pressure is well shown in the familiar example of carbonated waters. These are bottled under considerable pressure, the gas itself furnishing the pressure, in order that they shall become charged with a great quantity of the gas, which being liberated as the pressure is removed by drawing the cork, gives rise to the well known effervescence. In absorbing or discharging the gas, however, there is no change in the volume of the liquid.—New York Telegram.

Effect of Tobacco on Boys.

An experimental observation of thirty-eight boys of all classes of society and of average health, who have been using tobacco for periods ranging from two months to two years, has recently been recorded by Science. Twenty-seven showed injury to the constitution and insufficient growth; thirty-two showed the existence of irregularities in the heart's action, disordered stomach, cough and a craving for alcohol; thirteen had intermittency of the pulse, and one had consumption. After they had abandoned the use of tobacco, within six months nine one-half were free from all their former symptoms, and the remainder had recovered by the end of the year. —Boston Herald.

Dr. Wellington.

At the installation of the Marquess Camden as chancellor of Cambridge, the duke received the honorary degree of D. C. L. Immediately afterward, at a garden party at Sidney, Gregton, who approached the gate just after the duke, heard his grace give his name to the porter as "Dr. Wellington."—F. E. Lretlca.

Brains in Business.

One great secret of success in business is necessary, in fact, of success on a large scale—is to conceive of it as a matter of principle, not merely as a series of transactions, remarks a contemporary. There are great merchants as there are great statesmen, and there are small merchants as there are small politicians, and the difference between the great and the small men is very much the same in both professions. The small politician works by the day, and sees only the one small opportunity before him; the small merchant does the same thing—he is looking for the next dollar. The statesman, on the other hand, is master of the situation because he understands the general principles which control events; this knowledge enables him to deal with large questions and to shape the future.

The great merchant does the same thing. The business is not a mere money getting affair; not a mere market barter, but a science and an art. He studies the general laws of trade, watches the general conditions of the country, investigates present needs, foresees future wants, and adapts his business to the broad conditions of his time and place. He puts as much brain into his work as does the statesman, and he ends by being, not a money getter, but a large minded and capable man.

An eminently successful man of the statesmanlike quality with the other clay that the more he understood of life, the more clearly he saw that it was all done on business principles. By which he meant, not only that the universe stands for gain dollar, but that the universe is governed by unvarying laws; that promptness, exactness, thoroughness and honesty are wrought into its very fiber. It ought to be the ambition of every young man to treat his business from the point of view of the statesman, and not from that of the politician.—Cicero and Salt Review.

Jack, the Photographer.

There is an amateur photographic crank here in Boston who has developed a morbid passion for a most unusual pastime. If his identity were ascertained—up to date it is a mystery—he would be apt to suffer from serious kicks and other unpleasant things, inflicted by persons who have undergone annoyance at his hands.

The Charles river at this season of the year is a favorite trysting place for aquatically disposed lovers, who travel about on lake calm water at the sundown, and spoon and spoon and spoon until the flukes come up to the surface and gasp for breath. Naturally the dark of the moon is considered the most appropriate time for these amatory pursuits, and it is at such lunar obscuration that the above photographer comes to the front.

Armed with a camera, he paddles a light canoe about over the still surface, until he finds himself unperceived in the neighborhood of some small craft, the suspicious immobility of which betrays Cupid in the offing. Then, without making the slightest noise, he trains his instrument upon the unconscious victims, springs a little magnesium flash light, and jerks simultaneously a string that exposes dry plate for a fraction of a second. Then he paddles as quietly as he is method, though the astonishing swiftness with which he skips away down the river performing an operation of that sort has thus far precluded all possibility of investigation.

The outrage has been perpetrated so many times that the very boldness of cause must now have quite a gallery of lovers afloat, all ready for exhibition at so much a head to the thousands of curious people who would undoubtedly be willing to pay liberally for a view of the collection. And meanwhile it appears that engaged or "courting" couples who go out in boats to spoon upon the Charles are rapidly becoming furious, owing to the fear of being "took" unawares by this scamp with the magnesium light.—Boston Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Hugo's Unsuccessful Play.

"Amy Robsart" is an imitation, or rather an adaptation, of Walter Scott, which served as the writer's debut on the stage. He never printed this piece, and the manuscript was supposed to be lost. When anybody spoke to him about it, he used to say, evidently in good faith, "I fancy I burned it." It was found at Guernsey under a pile of other old papers.

When it was produced at the Odeon, Victor Hugo borrowed for the occasion the name of his brother-in-law, Paul Foucher, the future inventor, then a schoolboy, I imagine, who sat on the same bench with Alfred de Musset. The first evening the piece was hissed, and the name, then unknown, of Paul Foucher rose to prominence. On the morrow Victor Hugo wrote to Tito Debaix a very manly letter, in which he said: "In face of the reception accorded to 'Amy Robsart' I feel it incumbent on me to declare that all the passages hissed yesterday are of my writing." This is exactly the answer he made Harel, the manager, on the first night. "But, M. Victor Hugo, the audience are hissing." "Well, be it so; that proves the piece to be mine." This was Frank and decided.

I doubt if any manager will think nowadays of mounting this imitation of Walter Scott even if it be Hugo's, as the author declared. Still, the piece is interesting, and the volume should be read. It is a bit of literature appearing in the heyday of an industrial and scientific exhibition. It is evil that things of the mind should be represented by the side of the apotheosis of what is material.—The Attenaeum.

Bad Grammar, but Facts.

"Dey say you know, Mrs. Thickly," said that lady's pedantic husband, "that man is an animal?"

"Yes, I did," replied she; "and what's more, I know that some animals is dumb animals, and that some men is dumber than all the dumb animals put together. That may not be grammar, but it's facts."—New York News.

THE NEW YORK STAR.

A Daily and Weekly Newspaper.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1889.

THE STAR BUILDING.

THE NEW YORK STAR passed into the hands of new managers in November last, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of it.

During the first months of the change the improvement made in it was so pronounced that it came to be recognized at once as

A Live, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the freshest of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are crisp, positive and bold. Its Democratic principles are so pronounced and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, on its recent reorganization, selected it as the medium for placing its official action and utterances before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in nation, state and city; and is the advocate of no individual or the organ of no faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York city on Sunday. The matter selected for the literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest merit and reputation. Their united contributions each Sunday would make a volume as large as Harper's Magazine, and treating of many more subjects than any monthly magazine published any discussion. The whole at a cost of only 5 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in many respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a perfect epitome of the really important news of the week carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in detail. Space is given to this class of literature most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to interest the women of the household. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but to interest him in the general news of the world, leaving home papers or each subscriber to supply the practical information on all agricultural topics. It is an excellent paper, therefore, to obtain, through favorable club rates, along with the weekly printed in your local newspaper.

THE ELECTIONS.

On Tuesday was a general shaking up of republican false promises, and the people, by their ballots have rebuked the present administration.

Ohio elects a democratic governor against a republican majority of 20,000 last year.

The democratic state ticket in New York is elected by 20,000, against 15,000 for Harrison one year ago.

New Jersey shows increased democratic majorities.

Virginia repudiates Mahone, and elects the democratic state ticket by 20,000.

Even Clarkson's old banner republican state of Iowa has been barely saved from the ruin.

All reports are most cheering to democracy.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

(The JOURNAL wants correspondents in all the surrounding towns in which it is not represented. Write us up the news in a plain, concise manner as possible. Correspondence should be mailed so as to reach us no later than Wednesday evening. Two very desirable features in correspondence are regularity and punctuality.)

Boyne City.

Henry Wagoner and Albert Wormer of Barry county are the guests of Charles Lisk, the former a "veteran" and also a disciple of Nimrod, and has designs, we understand, on the deer and bear of our extensive forests.

Henry A. Russel and family moved to southern Michigan last Wednesday.

The former vacant houses in Boyne are now nearly all occupied. Can this be due to our prospect of a railroad in the "near future?"

William Boswell was the guest of A. E. Martin Friday night. He was enroute to visit his family who reside in Clare.

Alfred Boardman returned to Manton last Wednesday.

David Thompson and family have moved to the state of Ohio.

The patrons of the Boyne postoffice are now recieving mail through the little window from the hands of Charlevoix county's sheriff, or were last week. No man can tell what a day may bring forth in the shape of a post office clerk in Boyne under this administration.

E. F. Allen our former abstract man visited Boyne City a few days last week.

Miss Cora Mills is recovering from a severe attack of fever.

George Fuller got his arm severely cut while sawing logs in the woods last week; at present is doing well.

Hiram A. Thompson is building a barn 18x26ft. on his lot opposite the Cobb cottage.

The first silver medal contest given under the auspices of the Boyne W. C. T. U. will be held in the Presbyterian church Wednesday evening. Nov. 6th.

Burt Melosh was arrested on Saturday for the alleged burning of his father's, L. N Melosh's, house, and we understand that L. N. was to be arrested Monday morning for complicity in the matter of the burning. There is $500 offered by the Insurance Company for the guilty party, if any there be, therefore some one must found or the money go begging.

James White and his sister have returned from their visit to Canada.

A. J. Hall has purchased the mail route between Charlevoix and Boyne City of A. Mitchell.

Will Pearson moved to Vanderbilt last week.

Willie B. Rurd is now postmaster.

Mrs. DeBar has returned from her southern visit.

A fine flag has been purchased and will soon be seen floating over our schools.

Miss Bell Dorrance has moved her millinery goods over Handy's drug-store.

The residence of Mat Cunningham is nearing completion. When finished it will present as neat and tasteful an appearance as any in town.

Sam Thatcher intends removing to the south part of the state in a few days. The U. S. Hotel will be closed at present.

The arrest of Bert Melosh for the burning of the Melosh residence has produced quite an excitement in town this week.

Miss Lavina Thompson commenced her second term of school at Horton's Bay Monday.

Miss Bertha Thompson has been engaged to teach the school which Miss Cora Mills was compelled to give up on account of her illness.

Advance.

Winter—the "ruler of the inverted year" is beginning to put in an appearance.

Lumbermen will be glad to see the snow but the majority of farmers are not ready for it.

Goffry VonPlatten has gone to Chicago to be gone several weeks.

L. E. Philips has bought a bran new covered carriage, and now his fast horse holds its head higher than ever.

Messrs Karlskin and Denny are making havoc among the finny tribe with their net.

David Willis has dug a well near his house and now he doesn't have to drink creek water like the rest of the Advance people.

Charles Heller has built a new fence around his property in this place.

Sydney Hayden has traded his yoke of oxen with Mr. Ten Cate of East Jordan for a yoke of three year old steers.

Mr. Chadbock reports having threshed 2,800 bushels of buckwheat for farmers in this part of the county. How is that for pancakes?

We are afraid we do not come up to Inwood's standard of beauty as to weight. We are about six feet high and have frame work enough to carry the 225 lbs easily but we lack about 100 of that. Our friends say that we bear a striking resemblance to Bill Nye, and owing to some domestic differences of opinion we are becoming quite bald headed.

Jas. O'Brian was taken seriously sick last Friday night,—probably the result of overtaxing his strength during the sickness of his family.

Progress of Inventions Since 1845.

In the year 1880 the present owner of the Scientific American newspaper commenced its publication and soon after established a bureau for the procuring of patents for inventions at home and in foreign countries. During the year 1845 there were only 502 patents issued from the U. S. patent office, and the total issue from the establishment of the patent office, up to the end of that year, numbered only 4,347.

Up to the first of July this year there have been granted 405,413. Showing that since the commencement of the publication of the Scientific American there have been issued U. S. Patent Office 402,166 patents, and about one third more applications have been made than have been granted, showing the ingenuity of our people to be phenomenal, and much greater than the enormous number of patents issued indicates. Probably a good many of our readers have had business transacted through the office of the Scientific American, in New York or Washington, and are familiar with Munn & Co.'s mode of doing business, but those who have not will be interested in knowing something about this, the oldest patent soliciting firm in this country, probably in the world.

Persons visiting the offices of the Scientific American, 261 Broadway, N. Y., for the first time will be surprised, on entering the main office to find such an extensive and elegantly equipped establishment, with its well cut counters, desks, and chairs to correspond, and its enormous safes, and such a large number of draughtsmen, specification writers, and clerks, all busy as bees, reminding one of a large banking or insurance office, with its hundred employees

In conversation with one of the firm, who had commenced the business of soliciting patents in connection with the publication of the Scientific American, more than forty years ago, I learned that his firm had made application for patents for upward of one hundred thousand inventers in the United States, and several thousand in different foreign countries and had filed as many cases in the Patent Office in a single month as there were patents issued during the entire first year of their business career. This gentleman has seen the Patent Office grow from a sapling to a sturdy oak, and he modestly hinted that many thought the Scientific American, with its large circulation, had performed no mean share in stimulating inventions and advancing the interests of the Patent Office. But it is not alone the patent soliciting that occupies the attention of the hundred persons employed by Munn & Co., but a large number are engaged on the four publications issued weekly and monthly from their office, 261 Broadway, N. Y., viz.: The Scientific American, the Scientific American Supplement, The Export Edition of the Scientific American, and the Architects and Builders Edition of the Scientific American. The first two publications are issued every week, the latter two, the first of every month.

Our Country's Future.

Or Great National Questions, is the title of Mr. Halberton's new book, treating of some of the more important social, political and business questions of the day. The work embodies the opinions of more than one hundred of our national leaders, and is, on this account, of much more than ordinary interest. Not only is what he has written, but also in bringing together the opinions of such eminent men as Bishop Foss, President Harrison, Ex-President Cleveland, Cardinal Gibbons, Dr. Wayland Hoyt, Talmage, Cowell, Bishop Potter, Powderly and others, on swing these vital topics of the day Mr. Halberton has done the public a good service. We understand that the book is to treat of marriage, divorce, the rum power, labor, taxation, our coast defences, speculation, sorrows of the city poor and other topics that would naturally have a bearing on the present and future prosperity of our people.

This volume will give to the reader a vast fund of information on all these subjects that are so frequently coming up in the newspapers and periodicals; and the man who reads it understandingly, will find himself well informed on all these important questions of the day. Not only this, but he will have his information from the most reliable source. The authorities quoted are eminent in Church and State, they have devoted years to the study of these subjects, and their suggestions and notes of warning should be carefully read and heeded by all who are interested d in the continued prosperity and stability of our country. We know of no other book that will contain so much late reliable information on these topics.

Mr. Halberton is a popular author and bright journalist, and, all in all, this volume will be found exceedingly interesting and suggestive. Sold only by subscription.

BERT MASON.

The opening dinner at the Fountain City House was given on Sunday by Mrs. Bond, wife of the new landlord. Mr. Bond will retain his place as clerk of the Lawrence until Dec. 1st, when he will attend personally to the affairs of the house. Ned Bacon is now clerk. The dinner last Sunday is a sufficient indication that the wants of the public will be well cared for.

The engagement of Will C. Graves, formerly of the Lansing Republican and now state news editor of the Detroit Tribune, and Miss Bertha Wells, daughter of Frank Wells of Lansing has been announced, and is starting on the round of the State press. Mr. Graves was at one time a resident of Charlevoix.

Rev. G. W. Clark has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Baptist church and is preparing to move out of town. The expressions of regret are universal as Mr. and Mrs. Clark have hosts of friends here. Mr. Clark has done a good work for the church here and has been earnest, faithful and effective in all religious work.

It would be a mistake for farmers to be led into the notion that the business men of the town are their enemies, or that they are reaping great profits. As a matter of fact the average merchant finds it pretty close squeezing to get along, pay his bills and pay his help. Yet many a customer has been helped over a tight place by being furnished goods on time till the crops came in. When a subscription paper is started to build a road or remove an unfortunate man for a lost horse, it soon finds its way to town and as a general thing they respond to its call liberally. The best of feeling should exist between the farm and business men.—Belding Banner.

We do not believe that Charlevoix boys are any worse than other boys generally, but it is a fact that we never heard of as many outrages on hallowe'en night, as were perpetrated in this town last Thursday night. Not simply small boys removing gates and loose signs, but young men (?) tipping over outhouses, ringing church bells, smashing lamp posts and window lights, and hiding and and destroying movable property generally. Another year the village council should appoint sufficient special police for that night to protect the property of the village. If the council will not do it, then each citizen should try to protect his own property by whatever means seems most convenient or effective.

Historical Society.

A stormy night caused a light attendance at the meeting of the historical society last week. The program opened with an instrumental solo by Miss Maggie Green. The retiring president, E. H. Green made a few remarks on the work of the society, gave some advice for the future, and introduced H. M. Enos, the new president. President Enos then gave his inaugural address, in which he discussed the benefits to be derived from an active membership in the society. Other musical selections of the evening were a vocal solo by Miss Lillie Carpenter, and an instrumental by Miss Ella Cochran.

The resignation of Mrs. Bartholomew as secretary was presented and accepted, and Miss Flora Nelson was elected to fill the vacancy.

The executive committee presented a program outlining the study of North American history by topics, which was adopted by the society.

The meeting this week will be with Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Wood. Paper by C. J. Strang, on "Discovery and Settlement of America."

Smithson Lumber Co. Burned Out.

Last Thursday night about ten o'clock the Smithson Lumber Co.'s saw mill and turning factory were destroyed, together with a large amount of manufactured stock. The fire is supposed to have originated in the engine room. Loss estimated at $10,000, with no insurance. Insurance had been written on the property to take effect Nov. 5—the next day.

Although the mill was six miles from town, it was regarded as a Charlevoix institution, this being the recognized postoffice and base of supplies. The destruction at this time of year will seriously affect a large number of men who had got comfortably settled for the winter's work.

Congregational Church.

Services as usual at the Congregational church next Sunday. Song service Saturday evening at 7:30.

Hereafter three bells will ring before church service Sunday morning, one-half hour apart; the first bell at 9:30. School time will be used in all our church services.

Fireman's Club Dances.

Commencing Friday evening, Nov. 8th, the Charlevoix fire department will inaugurate a series of dances to be continued every two weeks during the winter, at the village hall. Good music and good order.

Government Work at the Soo.

The new government dock, which has been in the course of construction all summer along the front of Fort Brady, was completed this week. The last stone filling was done Tuesday. The work has of course been prosecuted under the direction of F. S. Wheeler, who is chief of the government work in this region. The first survey of the work and plans of the cribs were made by Joseph Ripley. These were submitted to Gen. Poe who approved of them. However, Mr. James Callard has been the engineer in immediate charge of the work during its construction and directed the contractor in his operations. The final inspection of the work was made Wednesday. The inspection has been a continuous one, of course, but Wednesday the work was pronounced satisfactory as a whole, and accepted as far as Mr. Wheeler is concerned. Mr. Callard is now preparing a report concerning the work, which will be submitted to Gen. Poe by Mr. Wheeler.

The work is certainly a good one and reflects much credit on the contractor, Mr. L. E. Allen, of Charlevoix, as well as upon the engineering corps. It is very substantially built and will fill a long felt want in the matter of dock room. The dock has a frontage of 1,221 feet on the river and 235 feet in the slip, at the north end of the dock. The total length constructed being 1,454 feet. The cribs which rest on piles, cut off twenty feet below the waters level are twenty-four feet in hight of which four feet are above water. In their construction there has been used in round numbers 2,000,000 feet of white pine and hemlock, board measure; and 105,146 pounds of drift bolts. The total cost of material was $30,977. There are 38 piles used in the work. None of them are driven less than ten feet in the river bed and some as deep as thirty feet. The cribs were filled with stone brought from the government canal. Of this 22,119 cubic yards were used. The dredging for the work was done by Hickler & Son a year or more ago and cost $8,989.93. The total cost of labor done thus far is $32,807.29 while there remains the filling to be done back of the pier. This will cost about $13,000. When this is done it will bring the total cost of the work including materials and labor to $76,784.22. Mr. Allen's contract was for over $50,000. The filling back of the pier will be done this winter by Collins & Farwell, the contractors on the new lock.

The work of pile driving began last February. The work of crib building in May. All the work has been vigorously pushed by those who have had it in charge. The crib building and stone fillinghave been done in about three and a half months continuous work. The timber was done by Abe Mitchell. Dr. George Sadlier of Ravenna, Ohio, directed the work of loading the stone from the spoil banks, while Morgan Cavanaugh has had charge of the work of filling the cribs. L. E. Allen the contractor has officiated as general walking boss. Mr. Allen who was responsible to the Government for the dock has left a work that is highly creditable to him. While here he has made many friends who will regret to have him leave. He will go to Charlevoix Monday.—Soo News, Oct. 26.

The advantages of this contract to Charlevoix have been considerable. Mr. Allen has paid John Nicholls for timber, $16,000; tug Martin $1,200; tug Rawson, $1,500; building scows, $1,500; total $20,200. All this for labor and material in Charlevoix.

The Pulpit and the Stage.

Rev. F. M. Shrout, pastor United Brethren church, Blue Mound, Kan., says: "I feel it my duty to tell what wonders Dr. King's New Discovery has done for me. My lungs were badly diseased, and my purchasers thought I could live only a few weeks. I took five bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery and am sound and well, gaining 35 lbs. in weight."

Arthur Love, Manager Love's Funny Folks Combination, writes: "After a thorough trial and convincing evidence, I am confident Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, beats 'em all, and cures when everything else fails. The greatest kindness I can do my many friends is to urge them to try it." Free trial bottles at F. G. Hisen & Co.'s drug store. Regular sizes 50c. and $1.00. 3

A SONG OF SATISFACTION.

I will not chide because the day
Is dark and cold,
For you the clouds of drowsing gray,
I know are struggling shaft and ray
Of sunshine's gold.

That for me tireless warfare keen,
And, peradventure, should I weep,
Just when my eyes were filled with tears
So fill I could not see,
Victoriously might gleam their spears,
A victory gained for me.
Who knoweth by a chidden woe,
The conquest hour might never know.

I will not doubt because my heart
Wants love delayed:
But hold to each the faith that start
With promise false to once the smart,
Lest I, too, be found wanting in splendid
For not to believe is to be cold.
A faithless thought, a heart unkind,
Are a dread—of frequent unless,
That time might make me run,
Would so distract from my poor worth,
And insist my heart outrun,
That all my life would beseemed be
By this one hour's inconstancy.

Lo! I'm not false that I should fear
My loyalty;
Nor doubtful that I cease to peer
Beyond the sunlight I am here
To stray abroad.
What care I, who am late to ash,
For where the lights and shadows fall,
For where the variant seasons pass,
For one brief hour's suspense?
I will not fear, if I must yearn,
Smile with joy prepense.
Thy may soul is of such one,
So heart true is of its orbit lost.
Anna K. Kelley in Three Democrats.

HOW I WAS DECEIVED.

Blanche Graham was a beautiful woman, with languid, dreamy eyes, yet she seemed neither indolent nor passionate, and one would say that even in her repose she was keenly alert. Her lips, though thin and drawn tightly over her long but exquisitely white and even teeth, yet had in their arches a slight fullness, which, to the experienced physiognomist, is indicative either of the yielding will or of sensuousness—not sensuality. Her nose was almost Grecian in its strength, contour and rigid nostrils, but there was nothing in her demeanor to indicate either Grecian hauteur or Grecian force.

She was beautiful; but was she good, true and trusty? That question I asked myself over and over again in the solitude of my room, when, away from the witchery of her eyes, the spell of her presence, I was drawn to her by a nameless art. She excited my sympathies by a confidence that, to the honorable mind, is sure to challenge a like return. But, with singular inconsistency, when I reached each interview, I read in that artlessness an art, too deep for proof, yet apparent to my suspicious mind.

Over and over again I said, "I will be on my guard, and not be led like a bird by the snare;" and confident of my strength, I sought her alluring presence nightly, not seeing, silly boy that I was, that I was drifting away from the ground of my reason, and floating on a tide of passion that might take me out upon a troublesome sea.

That Blanche loved me appeared to me certain, judging from her confidence and demeanor; but that she coveted me I saw little clearly.

Her advances against the citadel of my reserve were indeed cautious, but they were just as steady as the pressure of the water against the bank which it is to overflow; and I, seeing this danger, yet made feeble and less feeble efforts to shake off the influence that held me a prisoner, until one evening found her in my arms—my betrothed!

I had yielded—she had won.

When I went home that night I should go if with an argo.

With the excess of my passion and happiness? Ah, no! With unhappiness. I saw before me shapes of evil which would not out.

What a fool I had been! How could I face my fate? I was fool enough to be so determined to play the coward's part and run away.

Proceeding to my room in the dormitory of the college, I carefully gathered and packed all my books and superfluous clothes in my large, black leather trunk which I labeled with a card, "John Campbell—to be called for," and checked to the care of one of the tutors, whom friendship I knew I could trust. Then, filling a carpetbag with my linen and necessary articles, I stole away unnoticed, reaching the railway station just as the midnight express train came thundering along.

Next morning I stood in the dining room of my town residence, to the amazement of my father and mother, and the unmistakable delight of Alice Edwards.

"What in the world?" cried mother, "Is it you, John? What has happened?"

Father said not a word, but awaited in silence my answer.

Alice's eyes beamed gladness. She could receive me without questions.

I had thought all this over, and, loving both father and mother, had resolved to make a "clean breast of it" to them. This made the answer easy. But Alice! Did I care to have her know all? Alice, whom I had fondly loved from her first advent, a waif, eight years before. That pale, homely face, not a line of beauty in it, and yet as full of sweetness as a rose, would bear the truth—indeed, would be all the happier for the truth, I thought. I hesitated no longer when she came up.

"What is it, dear Johnny?"

I kissed her first, then my mother; shook hands with father, and while the coffee cooled in the pot told my story, keeping nothing back.

"Well, my boy, better this than something worse, but I confess I like not this midnight flight; it savors of cowardice; it is not the course of honor."

"I know it father; still I am so persuaded that this Blanche Graham is all art and hypocrisy that I cannot give her the right to the consideration which an honorable person would claim."

Mother was silent. Alice sighed audibly. Why did they neither approve nor condemn? A woman's heart is a battery easily charged, yet there are stormquakers to which it is as dead as if the currents of feelings and passion were wanting. Alice is a tall, student of woman's nature who does not see in this quiescence the most positive of all conditions.

I knew that mother saw me as I was; I felt it in my soul that she had fathomed a truth, up to that moment unconfessed even to myself, that, despite my flight and repudiation of the betrothal, I yet was in the toils of lover's enthralment; I was neither free nor safe in myself.

A pang as keen as a knife thrust shot through my breast: the love for Blanche Graham was not left behind in that midnight escape from her bodily presence; it was in the heart, not a deadened or benumbed sense, but a vital, overmastering power. I shivered and sickened. And Alice! She sat staring at me with those sweet blue eyes, speaking tenderness and pity in their mute language, but around the mouth were lines of pain so marked that I started. She arose suddenly, glided to my side, bent over and kissed my forehead and then hurriedly left the room.

"What ails Alice, wifey?"

No reply, save a sad smile.

"I see nothing for it, John, but for you to go down to Manchester until this affair blows over. You can stay there with my partner, Mr. Custer. I'll write all the explanation necessary. You may start by the afternoon train."

So it was arranged. I saw nothing of Alice all that day: but just before I left the house for the station she came down from her room to say good-by. She evidently had been weeping, and her pale face looked thin and pinched, as if she had suddenly grown to thirty—twice her years.

"What is it, Alice, darling?" I exclaimed, drawing her to my bosom.

"Nothing—nothing, Johnny; only—only I am so sorry for what has happened, and that you are going away, good-by, Johnny!" and she gave me her lips to kiss.

Before I could recover from surprise at her unwonted forwardness she had gone back to her room again, and I saw her no more.

The next day I sat in Mr. Custer's office—a sober, earnest, thoughtful person for one whose years were not yet twenty-one.

How expertly I plunged into business! Full of vigor and youthful elasticity, I could not well overwork myself, and yet, had I been only half as strong, I must have worked all the same to keep at bay a misery that at times was almost unendurable. The shadow of Blanche Graham never left my side. I grew fairly to loathe it; but it was there all the same, and in my dreams we rode again, always as lovers. Do what I would, there was no forgetfulness for me; and, as the months whirled away, I became a mystery even to myself, so changed was I from my old, joyous self. I, too, was grown old suddenly; twice my real years seemed to weigh me down.

Mr. and Mrs. Custer having known nothing of me before my entrance to their family circle, of course, detected no change, but I could see by their attention and kindness towards me that they were anxious in my behalf. Mr. Custer would try to force me away from work; Mrs. Custer would seek to win me into society, would invite the most charming people to spend an evening. But I cannot say I enjoyed any diversion; work, action, the assertion of myself, alone appeared my tormenting shade.

All this time I wrote freely and candidly to father and mother, as also did Mr. Custer, judging from the tone of letters from home, which warned me against overwork, and finally threatened with removal if I would persist in fighting fire with my bare hands," as father expressed it.

But never a line came from Alice. She "sends love," mother almost uniformly added at the end of her long, monotonous epistles, but that was all, and I grew to believe the little, homely face cared not for me, had slight interest in me. At which I sighed—more from mortified pride than from grief, I fear.

Taking the position of traveler, I took the northern route, and extended the trade of the house considerably. I became browned by exposure, grew a full beard and became otherwise so changed that my own parents would hardly have recognized me. All thoughts of returning home were abandoned.

I heard nothing of Blanche Graham—knew not if she were living or dead, and her memory, after three years' struggle, became a dead sorrow, but not a forgotten one. Little Alice Edwards I remembered only as a child whom my good mother had rescued from want and brought up as her own—a homely but thoroughly good creature, whom I hoped some day to see married to some equally homely and good man.

One evening I met at dinner a young woman whom the excellent Mrs. Custer introduced as her niece—Miss Elsie Bates. She was a fair, sweet faced girl, with a wealth of hair and a voice of exquisite richness; and her eyes were those of a gazelle in their tenderness and luster.

I looked upon her with unbridled admiration, I suppose, for her face was richly suffused with a flush as I stared and stammered, "How do you do, Bates?" at the same moment familiarly grasping her hand. I could only add, "Excuse me, Miss Bates; I have been so much among tradespeople of late that I have become somewhat rude in my manners."

Mr. Custer and his wife laughed heartily, and Miss Bates, with great good nature, put me at my ease.

I laughed, and forthwith felt "at home" with Miss Bates. Nor for a moment did I put on my armor of defense against a pretty face, as I had grown to do through my years of unhappiness.

I did not talk business that night. I did not go to my club the next night, but went with Miss Bates to the theater, and to make a long story short, I offered to the niece of Mrs. Custer my hand and heart.

"Are you wholly heart free, John?" she asked.

The question stung me, not with the old sense of a dagger thrust, but rather with that of nettles, for my whole body grew hot.

It was but a passing sense, a little shock, and I answered: "Heart whole, dear Elsie."

"Are you sure?" her lips said. But her eyes, so loving and glowing, answered her lips.

In some surprise I said: "I once loved a woman unworthy of me, and fled from her. I have for three years fought against that first passion, and I can say, in all truth, that I have conquered it. Were she to appear tonight before me, I could receive her with indifference."

"Blanche Graham was that woman," added Miss Bates.

I sprang to my feet. How did she know? Who had betrayed my secret?

"How about Alice Edwards—did you not love her?" she persisted, with provoking, but happy, inquisitiveness—happy, if her now radiant face told the truth.

"Alice Edwards—darling little Alice! Why I—I really never thought of it! Love her? Yes, I do love her, I believe—the poor, homely, sweet tempered child! She is a child to me—my foster sister, and if mother will give her to us, how happy we shall be!"

Before I had finished, Miss Bates arose, and stood at my side—not in anger, but in confidence and trust.

Placing her hand upon my shoulder, she said, "Alice has grown to be a woman, John—a not unbeautiful person, I am told. And your mother's letter to Mrs. Custer, received today, informs her that the entire family—your father, mother and Alice—will be here in a few days. Now, John, while I do not doubt your love for me, I cannot accept your hand until you have seen Alice, and she consents that you may take me for your wife. Nay, do not try to change this purpose," she added, seeing my disquiet. "I love you too well to have you make a further error in your own love life. Therefore good night, and sweet dreams to you!" And she was gone.

Mrs. Custer came in at the moment.

"Who is Miss Bates, Mrs. Custer?" I demanded, somewhat peremptorily.

"Well, sir, she is Miss Bates, I suppose. She is, too, I may say, a friend of your mother's and of Alice Edwards. She is a very dear girl, and if you can win her for a wife, Mr. Campbell, you will indeed be a happy man."

And the lady drew herself up somewhat proudly, as if to recall anything I might say to the contrary.

"Humph!" That was not a very expressive rejoinder, but it was all I gave as I turned about sharply, bolted from the room, and (now was it bold, still wondering, "Who is Miss Bates?"

I returned late the following evening, having seen nothing of Miss Bates in the morning before leaving.

I was, in fact, in a temper; I didn't care to see her—at least I said so to myself. The first person I confronted in the hall as I entered, over I had doffed my hat, was my mother—my own dear mother.

"My boy, is it you?" she sobbed, looking wistfully into my face. "Oh, how changed, yet my own boy!"

"Your boy, mother, just as ever."

Then father came forward, and happy was the greeting.

With one upon each arm I entered the parlor, my eyes wandering searchingly around.

"Where is she—Alice?"

"Alice, darling, come!" cried mother.

The library door opened, and there stood—Miss Bates!

"Johnny, dear, forgive me!" she cried as she flew to my arms. "I am Alice Edwards."

"Alice, darling is it you?" was all I could say, as I strained her to my heart.

"There, boy, you've got the right girl this time!" exclaimed father, clapping me on the back. "No running away now, sir, d'ye hear?"

"Hear, dear Johnny!" my beloved whispered, her lips on my own.

"Dinner," called out Mr. Custer; and drawing mother away—the happy—the mother in all that city—father led the way to the dining room.

What a sight! Had the elves been at work to transform the house into a bower of roses? I had read of the "aroma of dreams," as a poetic fancy; here was its reality.

The room was festooned with flowers, the table was loaded with them, and between two plates lay two magnificent camellias, tied by a white and blue ribbon. At these plates were we—Alice and I—seated.

The old folks confessed to having hatched the conspiracy to pass Alice off as Miss Bates, seeing that she was so changed in form and feature as to be unrecognizable by their son, whose intense work life they so earnestly desired to break up. And the result, I was caught. Alice did feel a trifle guilty at that "ungling for a husband," as Mr. Custer called it, but she was so supremely happy that she forgot to sigh over her share in the little game.

Alice became my wife that autumn, when our dear old home in the suburb of the metropolis witnessed a burst and blaze of nuptial glory that was a nine days' wonder. I traced out, as far as possible, my old college chums, and invited them to the wedding.

To my astonishment—not my dismay—there came my class fellow, Charley Pelton, and on his arm a very beautiful woman, his wife, in whom I recognized Blanche Graham. She had captured a husband, good soul, but ere the evening had passed I knew that in that soul rankled a wound too deep for healing. He turned from his wife with loathing, as I saw with eyes that were not to be deceived.

Did he know what had been my relation to Blanche? Probably not.

It only needed that ordeal to prove how dead she was to me, and thus to communicate a happiness which few men are permitted to enjoy.—Philadelphia Republic.

THE STAR BUILDING.

THE NEW YORK STAR has been held into the hands of new managers in November last, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of the paper.

During the first months of the change the improvement made in it was so pronounced that it came to be recognized at once as

A Live, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the freshest of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are crisp, positive and bold. Its Democratic principles are so pronounced and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, on its recent reorganization, selected it as the medium for placing its official notice and utterances before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in nation, state and city; and is the advocate of no individual or the organ of no faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York city on Sunday. The matter selected for the literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest merit and reputation. Their united contributions each Sunday would make a volume as large as Harper's Magazine, and treating of many more subjects than any monthly magazine published ever discusses. The whole at a cost of only 5 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in many respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a perfect epitome of the really important news of the week carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in full. Space is given to the class of literature most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to interest the women of the household. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but to interest him in the general news of the world, leaving the home paper of each subscriber to supply the practical information on all agricultural topics. It is an excellent paper, therefore, to obtain, through a subscription, information, along with the weekly printed in your immediate locality.

A SONG OF SATISFACTION.

I will not chide because the day
Is dark and cold,
For you the clouds of deepening gray,
I know are struggling shaft and ray
Of sunshine's gold,
That for me strolen warfare keep,
And, persistentare, should I weep,
Just when my eyes were filled with tears
So full I could not see,
Victoriously might gleam their spears,
A victory gained for me—
Who blinded by a dishlaia was,
The conquest four might never know.

I will not doubt because my heart
Waits long delayed;
But hold in check the words that start
With promise false to ease the smart,
Their utterance upraid;
For not to harbor in my mind
A faithless thought, a word unkind,
A fear—a dread—of impish birth—
That time might make me cue,
Would so detract from my poor worth,
And brand my heart sorrow,
That all my life would sorrowed be
By this one hour's inconstancy.

Lo! I'm not false that I should fear
My life's reward,
Nor doubtful that I cease to peer
Beyond the tiny diamond one here
To stray abroad.
What care I, who am late to all,
For whom the lights and shadows fall,
For whom the servant seasons turn
For one brief hour's suspense?
I will not fear, if I must yearn,
But smile with joy prepense.
That my small life is of such cost,
No heart loss will be unduly lost.
Anna K. Kelsey in Times-Democrat.

HOW I WAS DECEIVED.

Blanche Graham was a beautiful woman, with languid, dreamy eyes; she seemed neither indolent nor passionate, and one would say that even in her sweetest smile there was a touch of pride, though thin and drawn tightly over her long but exquisitely white and even teeth, yet had in their clothes a slight fullness, which, to the experienced physiognomist, is indicative either of unyielding will or of sensuousness not sensuality. Her nose was almost Grecian in its strength, contour and rigid nostrils, but there was nothing in her demeanor to indicate either Grecian hauteur or Grecian force.

She was beautiful; but was she good, true and trusty? That question I asked myself over and over again in the solitude of my room, when, away from the witchery of her eyes, the spell of her presence, I was drawn to her by a nameless art. She excited my sympathies by a confidence that, to the honorable mind, is sure to challenge a like response. But, with singular inconsistency, when I reached each interview, I read in her unfathomable eyes, as in a book, for proof, yet apparent to my unwilled vision.

Over and over again I said, "I will be on my guard, and not be led like a bird to the snare," and confident of my strength, I sought her alluring presence nightly; not seeing, nay, half but that I was drifting away from the ground of my reason, and floating on a tide of passion that might take me upon a troublesome sea.

That Blanche loved me appeared to me certain, judging from her confidence and demeanor; but that she coveted me I saw in spite of myself.

Her advances against the citadel of my reserve were indeed cautious, but they were just as steady as the pressing of the water against the bank which it is to overflow; and I, seeing this clearly, yet made feeble and less feeble efforts to shake off the influence that held me a prisoner, until one evening found her in my arms—my betrothed!

I had yielded—he had won.

When I went home that night I shook as if with an ague.

With the excess of my passion and happiness? Ah, no! With unhappiness. I saw before me shapes of evil which would not away.

What a fool I had been! How could I face my fate? I could not face it, and so determined to play the coward's part and run away.

"What is it, Alice, darling?" I exclaimed, drawing her to my bosom.

"Nothing—nothing, Johnny; only—only I am so sorry for what has happened, and that you are going away. Good-by, Johnny!" and she gave me her lips to kiss.

Before I could recover from surprise at her unwonted forwardness she had gone back to her room again, and I saw her no more.

The next day I sat in Mr. Custer's office—a sober, earnest, thoughtful person for one whose years were not yet twenty-one.

How eagerly I plunged into business! Full of vigor and youthful elasticity, I could not well overwork myself, and yet, had I been only half as strong, I would have worked all the same to keep at bay a misery that at times was almost unendurable. The shadow of Blanche Graham never left my side. I grew fairly to loathe it; but it was there all the same, and in my dreams we met again, always as lovers. Do what I could, there was no forgetfulness for me; and as the months whirled away, I became a mystery even to myself, so changed was I from my old, joyous self. I, too, was grown old suddenly; twice my real years seemed to weigh me down.

Mr. and Mrs. Custer having known nothing of me before my entrance into their family circle, of course, detected no change; but I could see by their attention and kindness towards me that they were anxious in my behalf. Mr. Custer would try to force me away from work; Mrs. Custer would seek to woo me into society, would invite the most charming people to spend an evening. But I cannot say I enjoyed any diversion; work, action, the association of myself alone appeased my tormenting shade.

At this time I wrote freely and candidly to father and mother, as also did Mr. Custer, judging from the tone of letters from home, which warned me against overwork, and finally threatened me with removal "if I would persist in fighting fire with my bare hands," as father expressed it.

But never a line came from Alice. She "sends love," mother almost uniformly added at the end of her long, confiding communications, but that was all, and I grew to believe the little, homely friend cherished not really but slight interest in me. At which I sighed—more from mortified pride than from regret, I fear.

Taking the position of traveler, I took the northern route, and extended the trade of the house considerably. I became known well by sojourn, grew a full beard and became otherwise so changed that my own parents would hardly have recognized me. All thoughts of returning home were abandoned.

I heard nothing of Blanche Graham—knew not if she were living or dead, and her memory, after three years' struggle, became a dead sorrow, but not a forgotten one. Little Alice Edwards I remembered only as a child whom my good mother had lost sometimes from want and brought up as her own—a homely but thoroughly good creature, whom I hoped some day to see married to some equally homely and good man.

One evening, I met at dinner a young woman whom the excellent Mrs. Custer introduced as her niece—Miss Elsie Bates. She was a fair, sweet faced girl, with a wealth of hair and a voice of exquisite richness; and her eyes were those of a gazelle in their tenderness and luster.

I looked upon her with undisguised admiration, I suppose, for her face was richly suffused with a flush as I stared and stammered, "How do you do, Miss?" at the same moment familiarly grasping her hand. I could only add, "Excuse me, Miss Bates! I have been so much among tradespeople of late that I have become somewhat rude in my manners."

Mr. Custer and his wife laugh l hearty, and Miss Bates, with great good nature, put me at my ease.

I laughed, and fortiwith felt "at home" with Miss Bates. Not for a moment did I put on my armor of defense against a pretty face, as I had grown to do through my years of unhappiness.

I did not talk business that night. I did not go to my club the next night, but went with Miss Bates to the theatre and, to make a long story short, I offered the niece of Mrs. Custer my hand and heart.

"Are you wholly heart free, John?" she asked.

The question stung me, not with the old sense of a danger threat, but rather with the old memories, for my whole body grew hot.

It was but a passing sense, a little shock, and I answered: "Heart whole, dear Elsie."

"Are you sure?" her lips said. But her eyes, so loving and glowing, answered her lips.

In some surprise I said: "I once loved a woman unworthy of me, and fled from her. I have fought three years fought against that first passion, and I can say, in all truth, that I have conquered it. Were she to appear tonight before me, I could receive her with indifference."

"Blanche Graham was that woman," added Miss Bates.

I sprang to my feet. How did she know? Who had betrayed my secret?

"How about Alice Edwards—did you not love her?" she persisted, with provoking, but happy, inquisitiveness—happy, if her now radiant face told the truth.

"Alice Edwards—darling little Alice! Why I—I really never thought of it! Love her? Yes, I do love her, I believe—the poor, homely, sweet tempered child! She is a child to me—my foster sister, and if mother will give her to us, how happy we shall be!"

Before I had finished, Miss Bates arose, and stood at my side—not in anger, but in confidence and trust.

Placing her hand upon my shoulder, she said, "Alice has grown to be a woman, John—a not unbeautiful woman, you told. And your mother's letter to Mrs. Custer, received today, informs her that the entire family—your father, mother and Alice—will be here in a few days. Now, John, while I can not resist your love for me, I cannot accept your hand until you have seen Alice, and she consents that you may take me for your wife. Nay, do not try to change this purpose," she added, seeing my disputed. "I love you too well to have you make a further error in your own love life. Therefore good night, and sweet dreams to you!" And she was gone.

Mrs. Custer came in at the moment.

"Who is Miss Bates, Mrs. Custer?" I demanded, somewhat peremptorily.

"Well sir, she is Miss Bates, I suppose. She is, too, I may say, a friend of your mother's and of Alice Edwards. She is a very dear girl, and if you can win her for a wife, Mr. Campbell, you will indeed be a happy man."

And the lady drew herself up somewhat proudly, as if to resent anything it might say to the contrary.

"Humph!" That was not a very expressive rejoinder, but it was all I gave as I turned about sharply, bolted from the room, and soon was in bed, still wondering, "Who is Alice Bates?"

I returned into the following evening, having seen nothing of Miss Bates in the morning before leaving.

I was, in fact, in a temper; I didn't care to see her—at least I said so to my self. The first person I confronted in the hall as I entered, era I had doffed my hat, was my mother—my own dear mother.

"My boy, is it you?" she sobbed, looking wistfully into my face. "Oh, how changed, yet my own boy!"

"Your boy, mother, just as ever."

Then father came forward, and happy was the greeting.

With one upon each arm I entered the parlor, my eyes wandering searchingly around.

"Where is she—Alice?"

"Alice, darling, come!" cried mother.

The library door opened, and there stood—Miss Bates!

"Johnny, dear, forgive me!" she cried as she fell into my arms. "I am Alice Edwards."

"Alice, darling, is it you?" was all I could say, as I strained her to my heart.

"There, boy, you've got the right girl this time!" exclaimed father, slapping me on the back. "No running away now, sir, d'ye hear?"

"Dear, dear Johnny!" my beloved whispered, her lips on my own.

"Dinner," called out Mr. Custer; and drawing mother away—the happiest mother in all that city—father led the way to the dining room.

What a night! Had the elves been at work to transform the house into a bower of roses? I had read of the "aroma of dreams," as a poetic fancy; here was its reality.

The room was festooned with flowers, the table was loaded with them, and between two plates lay two magnificent camellias, tied by a white and blue ribbon. At these plates were we—Alice and I—seated.

The old folks confessed to having hatched the conspiracy to pass Alice off as Miss Bates, seeing that she was so changed in form and feature as to be unrecognizable by their son, whose intense work life they so earnestly desired to break up. And the result? I was caught. Alice did feel a trifle guilty at that "angling for a husband," as Mr. Custer called it, but she was so supremely happy that she forgot to sigh over her share in the little game.

Alice became my wife that autumn, when our dear old home in the suburbs of the metropolis witnessed a burst and blaze of nuptial glory that was a nine days' wonder. I truest out, as far as possible, my old college chums, and invited them to the wedding.

To my astonishment—not my dismay—there came my chum fellow, Charley Pulton, and on his arm a very beautiful woman, his wife, in whom I recognized Blanche Graham. She had captured a brave, good soul, but ere the evening had passed I knew that in that soul rankled a wound too deep for healing. He turned from his wife with loathing, as I saw with eyes that were not to be deceived.

Did he know what had been my relation to Blanche? Probably not.

It only needed that ordeal to prove how dead she was to me, and thus to communicate a happiness which few men are permitted to enjoy.—Philadelphia Republic.

THE NEW YORK STAR.

A Daily and Weekly Newspaper.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1889.

THE STAR BUILDING.

THE NEW YORK STAR passed into the hands of new management in November last, and a new corporation is now in full possession and control of it.

During the first months of the change the improvement made in it was so pronounced that it came to be recognized at once as

A Live, Bright and Brilliant Newspaper.

Its news columns are filled with the freshest of foreign, domestic and local news. Its editorials are crisp, positive and bold. Its Democratic principles are so pronounced and orthodox that the Democratic National Committee, on its recent reorganization, selected it as the medium for giving its official action and utterances before the voters of the party. It urges united Democracy in nation, state and city, and is the advocate of no individual or the organ of no faction.

ITS SUNDAY ISSUE OF 16 PAGES

is regarded universally as the best combination of original literature with news which is now published in New York every Sunday. The matter selected for the literary columns is supplied by scores of contributors of the highest literary ability, and the editorial contributions each Sunday would make a volume large as Harper's Monthly, and treating of many more subjects than any monthly magazine published ever discusses. The whole at a cost of only 3 cents for 16 pages!

THE WEEKLY EDITION

differs in many respects from the weekly editions of other New York papers. It is a perfect epitome of the eight important news of the week carefully condensed and systematically arranged. All the markets of interest to farmers are published in detail. Space is given to the class of literature most welcome in the home circle. Special care is taken to interest the women of the household. It does not pretend to instruct the farmer in farming, but to interest him in the general news of the world, leaving the home paper of each subscriber to supply the practical information on all agricultural topics. It is an excellent paper, therefore, to obtain, through a favorable club rate, the news of the weekly printed in your immediate locality.

This is, for democrats, not the single, but by far the most important lesson of the Ohio campaign.

It is pleasing to notice how the Republicans are retrenching their protection ideas. By slow degrees and gradual concession they are shaking off their deep rooted (?) principles of protection and beginning to advocate partial free trade. Why is this? Because the public is becoming appalled at the condition of affairs in general and are clamoring for a change. Republicans are beginning to realize that the g. o. p. is losing its grip.

THE ELECTIONS.

Later returns more than confirm the good reports of the elections last week.

In New York the democratic state ticket is elected by nearly 25,000, a gain of about 7,000 over the state elections two years ago. The republican majority in the state legislature is reduced from 30 to 10.

In Ohio the victory is much greater than was at first supposed. J. E. Campbell, democrat, is elected governor by about 12,000, and the democrats have a majority in both branches of the legislature, which insures the election of a democratic United States Senator.

The greatest surprise is in Iowa, where the entire democratic state ticket is elected by about 7,000, and the legislature is so close that a democratic United States Senator to succeed Allison seems almost certain.

In Virginia, Mahone republican for governor was buried under 40,000 majority for McKinney, the democratic candidate. This becomes more significant when it is known that the national republican administration gave Mahone all the support possible.

In Massachusetts the usual republican majority is considerably reduced, and the democrats gain 16 members of the legislature.

The democratic gains in New Jersey are most gratifying.

Notwithstanding this is an "off" year, democrats have reason to be proud of the work accomplished, and to rejoice over the bright prospects of future success. The same organization and work in all the states next year that have been given in a few states this year will carry the U. S. house of representatives and possibly the senate.

Harrison Rebuked.

The returns received yesterday from the state elections of Tuesday show a remarkable Democratic upheaval. The victory in New York grows in magnitude, and the state seems now to have given 25,000 plurality for the Democrat ticket. The stinging blow to Foraker by Campbell's election in Ohio becomes a rebuke to President Harrison by the election of the whole Democratic state ticket and of a Legislature Democratic on joint ballot insuring a Democratic Senator for six years. The most astonishing of all victories is the carrying of the Republication banner state Iowa, which has not had a Democratic Governor since before the war. Boies (Dem) is elected by something like 10,000 majority, and it seems probable that he has carried with him the whole democratic state ticket, although that cannot yet be positively asserted. It is too early yet to know the result on the Legislature, but there seems a possibility that it may have gone Democratic, assuring a Democratic Senator as the successor of Wm. B. Allison, Rep. In Virginia the majority against Mahone has reached 30,000 and is still climbing. Massachusetts gives the lowest Republican majority that she has given in ten years, with the exception of the year when Gen. Butler was elected. The Legislature shows an increased Democratic membership.

New Jersey has increased its Democratic majority by several thousand, and has a Legislature heavily Democratic.

Every state shows great Democratic gains.

And, with all the rest, the City of Chicago shows a largely increased Democratic majority, giving promise of the time when Illinois shall join the Democratic column.

It looks like a rebuke.—Free Press.

Mr. Morton and his License.

The Rev. A. P. De Long of Imlay City, Mich., writes to the Morning News as follows:

"A special to your paper, under date of Oct. 25, states that a liquor license was granted Levi P. Morton, the vice president, to sell whisky, beer, and other spirituous and malt liquors at retail. I so stated in a temperance address. The Detroit Tribune contradicts the story by a letter from I. P. Morton's secretary. Now, was this license granted to Morton or not?"

Here are the facts about the saloon license: Levi P. Morton, vice-president of the United States, owns a family hotel in Washington called the Shoreham. That hotel is managed for Mr. Morton by one James K. Keenan. The profits go to Mr. Morton, including the profits on wine, beer, and other liquors sold there at retail under a saloon license taken out in the name of James K. Keenan.

Mr. Morton's money paid for that saloon license, and Mr. Morton reaps the profits of it.

There have been a great many explanations of this matter, most of which were of the kind that do not explain. If Mr. Morton or his friends object to the exact truth being known they probably have sufficient reasons for their objections.—Chicago Daily News.

By the way, Bro. Sentinel, does this correction suit you?

Perpetuating an Incident.

As Mlle. Rhea was leaving Ottawa, Canada, an old, white haired gentleman approached her in the sleeping car, and, with charming cordiality, presented her with a basket of the most beautiful grapes, in the top of which was a large bunch of Marechal Neil roses and the following note: "Dear Madame Rhea—When the first Napoleon was brought a captive into Plymouth sound by Capt. Maitland, of the Bellerophon, I was born—July, 1815. My father, who had extensive hot houses, sent to Napoleon a basket of the finest hot house grapes. In seeing you in the role of 'Josephine' I thought I would ask your acceptance (in your character as empress of the French) of a basket of the same fruit, thus perpetuating the incident and paying a tribute to the 'empress' in the person of one who so ably represents her. With best wishes and regrets, dear madame, yours very truly, Richard Nettle, Ottawa, Oct. 19, 1889." And the old gentleman added: "Although my country men called Napoleon a rascal, my father had the greatest admiration for him."—Exchange.

He Recovered.

One of Chicago's old residents was taken sick the other day, and he was seriously ill, too. He was not ready to die and he asked that a leading physician be summoned. When this physician came in the old settler told him that he felt he was going to die. After a careful examination the physician smiled encouragingly and tried to dissipate his patient's mortuary ideas. "Why," he argued, "you are all right. You think you are going to die, but your feet are not cold. You ought to know that a man with warm feet is not going to die." The old settler regarded his physician contemptuously for a few moments, and then said with disgust in his voice: "Warm feet! What do I care to do with it? Look at John Rogers! He died with warm feet because he was burned at the stake. Don't argue with me on the question of feet temperature!" The physician said nothing, but the old settler recovered.—Chicago Herald.

A New Way to Earn One's Living.

Schell tells a good story about a comic singer who called the other day at the manager's office of one of the principal cafe chantants in Paris to see about getting an engagement. "But let me see," said the manager, I seem to know your face. "Did you not sing at the Vernon theatre last season?" "Yes." "But, my poor fellow, you were a fearful frost." "Yes, on purpose." "How on purpose?" "You see, the manager didn't pay us. If I had sung well I should have got nothing but applause. As I sang so wretchedly as I could, the people bombarded me with apples, and I got something to eat at least."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BIBLE'S HISTORY.

WONDERFUL FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT THE DIVINE BOOK.

The Early Compilers—St. Jerome and His Work—The Translators and the Many Bibles They Published—When the Division Into Verses Took Place.

Two thousand one hundred and seventy-four years ago, in the year 283 B. C., seventy of the wise men of Alexandria engaged themselves in compiling and collating the Hebrew Scriptures into their present united form and further simplifying the works by translating them into Greek for the benefit of the Jews then in Egypt. The results of their labors have since been known collectively as the Septuagint, from the fact that it is the work of the seventy translators.

About 400 years later, in the Second century, A. D., the books of the New Testament were added and the whole translated into Latin.

The Itala, or Latin version, soon became the standard of the primitive Christians, and was used to the exclusion of both the Hebrew and Greek versions for two centuries, until the St. Jerome revision of A. D. 405. After St. Jerome had finished his crowning work, a great deal of which he performed in the village of Bethlehem, almost in sight of the birthplace of Jesus, the Dalmatian and Pannonian monks hid away their old versions of the Bible and would use no other except the one which he had given them by their patron, Jerome, himself.

The Jerome revision was as superior to the work of the seventy as their work was to the old semi-barbaric work which existed prior to the translation of 283 B. C.

ST. JEROME.

The most carefully written copies of the Bible obtainable were consulted by the scholarly saint and compared with all Arabic, Hebrew and Syriac versions, in all of which he made emendations and corrections which have stood the test of all subsequent time. The herculean task undertaken by St. Jerome will be better understood when the reader has been informed that over 230 versions of the Evangelists, each differing from the other in many of its essential details, were presented for the consideration of the sages at the council of Nice, in 325 A. D. For hundreds of years copyists had added to and taken from the Scriptures to such an extent as to make it extremely difficult for even the most learned to decide what should remain for the edification of future generations or what should be eliminated from the sacred pages as apocryphal.

The word "bible," meaning book, or as applied by the early writers, "the book," was first used by Chrysostom as early as the fifth century, where he speaks of the sacred writings collectively as the Bible, or "the books." The infinite variations which occurred in the manuscripts written by the early Christian fathers have caused a great deal of contention among churchmen, some admitting certain books canonical which are rejected by others as apocryphal. This you can find illustrated by comparing a Douay and a King James Bible of today; the former admits several books which the King James translators would not, as they considered them uncanonical.

The several books as arranged and accepted at present are the results of years of labor and of countless councils and revision assemblages. For 1,200 years after the Saviour of Men ended his brief career on the rugged heights of Calvary, the touching details of which are known to over 700,000,000 of people now living on land on the globe, each book of the Bible was complete and stood, undivided into chapters, paragraphs or verses.

DIVISIONS OF THE BIBLE.

Prior to the time of the Spanish rabbi, the Jew had employed a system of dividing the chapters into verses in the Old Testament, a system which had never been adopted by the Christians, and which was discarded for that of the learned Spaniard by the Jews themselves. The New Testament was not divided into verses until after the invention of the art of printing, by the Robert Stephens Greek edition in 1551.

Of the early translations of the Bible the most important, aside from the Septuagint and the St. Jerome versions, are the threefold Egyptian translation of the fourth century. This remarkable work of the copyist was in three languages, was intended for all parts of Egypt; the Versio Figurata, collated by Bede, of Edessa, in the eighth century; that of Paul, bishop of Tela, in 617, and the eighth, ninth and tenth century translations, made respectively by Bede, Alfred and Alfric.

During the dark ages, and on down to the time Luther gave his masterpiece to the world, several translations were made, including that of Notker-Labeo, 983 A. D.; they prepared under the inspiration of Pertus Waldus, 1170; the important work of Louis the Pious, 1227; that of Charles the Wise, 1380; that of Guyars version of 1298; the thirteenth century version in Spanish during the reign of Alphonso V, and the two excellent works of Wickliffe and Huss, the latter for the Bohemians and the former for the English speaking peoples. With the invention of printing every people who had ever laid claim to literary abilities seemed to think that he had been specially commissioned from on high to retranslate the Word of God, as one would naturally infer from the fact that not less than seventeen German translations alone were given the public between the time of Guttenberg and Faust and that of Martin Luther.

The early printed editions of the Bible remind one of what the philosopher says about the human frame—they were "curiously and wonderfully made." The Wickliffe (sometimes spelled Wycliffe) version of 1384 was the first English translation. John Wickliffe, the translator, was condemned to be burned for presuming to do such a thing without the consent of the clergy, but was finally allowed to die a natural death. His Bible was never printed; however, there are many manuscripts copies of it.—John W. Wright in St. Louis Republic.

HOW CANNON ARE BORED.

It Takes Eighteen Days to Go from Nose to Breech Through One Kind.

All but the cannon is turned down and is ready to be bored inside. In this operation it must be bored so straight and true that the boring tool, entering at the exact center of the small end of the cannon, will come out precisely at the center of the large end, seventeen feet away. The boring tool, or "bit," is held firm and motionless, while the great mass of steel to be bored turns around. This plan is found to insure steadiness of the "bit." It would be almost impossible to make this bit firm and solid enough to do its difficult work and yet free to turn around in the cannon.

The bit attends strictly to business, and steadily bores its way through the steel. The boring tool is called a "hog nosed" bit, and it roots up that cannon as if it enjoyed the operation. No long, graceful curls come from this boring, but small, crisp shavings that are removed as fast as they accumulate in order that the boring tool's work shall not be interfered with. The bit is going into the steel at the rate of three-eighths of an inch for every turn of the cannon, and it is making a round hole almost large enough for a boy to put his head in—five and three-quarters inches in diameter. As the round hole grows deeper the heavy bar, on which the bit is fastened, advances into the cannon steadily, moved by a number of wheels and screws that form part of the lathe.

I must not lose sight of the shavings, the little ones that come from the inside, and the long, spirally twisted ones that are turned from the outside of the cannon. A military looking man, standing near the lathe, does not lose sight of these shavings or trimmings, either. This man's business is to carefully inspect the borings and trimmings. That is what he is paid to do. Uncle Sam pays him and expects him to earn his salary. The reason is being made for Uncle Sam, and he intends to find out all its qualities, whether good or bad. So the man eyes the borings carefully. Now, if with a plane or your knife blade, you will cut a thin shaving from a bit of wood, it will show any little flaw existing in the wood from which it was sliced. The tiniest knot hole or crack will show in the shaving much more plainly than in the wood itself.

So it is with a cannon's shaving. It is a dreadful tell tale, and the fault finding man beside the gun knows this perfectly well. He examines the spiral turning, or the little piece of boring, and finds no evidence of a flaw or crack. The long spiral strip is as smooth as glass and as glossy as your sister's curls.

Into the solid steel the hog-nosed bit roots its way, until it is in so far that a little electric light must bear it company, to show the workmen what matters are progressing in the heart of the cannon. After eighteen days of steady boring the bit lets daylight into the bore of the cannon by emerging at the other (or larger) end, seventeen feet away.—St. Nicholas.

Turkish Baths Are Dangerous.

I was conversing today with a prominent physician concerning the case of a well known real estate dealer who was prostrated with apoplexy several years ago by taking a Turkish bath, and he was telling me how dangerous a thing a bath is. "I know this by experience," he said, "as well as from reading and observation. Some years ago I took a Turkish bath myself, and the result was a severe attack of pneumonia which confined me to my bed for three weeks. Even when I was able to get about, my health was so shattered that I had to spend a year travelling in Mexico and other southern countries before it was fully restored. Now I do not was one continual story, and divided into chapters, paragraphs or verses.

We will soon have enough Canadians in Michigan to go across the line and gobble up the land of our birth. The best thing Canada can do is to come into the Union as one of the States. She might then have a chance to reclaim her lost children and we would make Sir John governor of the state and so for little Oliver, we could send him out West to grow up with the country.—Citizen.

Frank Anderson now languishes in the cooler in East Jordan. We have not learned the direct charge against him but understand that it is in connection with the Court House Fire, which occurred on the night of October 8, 1887. Wild rumors are afloat as to other arrests that will follow, but for the present we withold any remarks in reference to the matter. However, our citizens should be guarded in their remarks in reference to this matter, which only tends to injure reputations and does themselves no good.—Citizen.

McCadillac the hallowe'en hoodlums turned in a false fire alarm and called out the fire department. In commenting on the outrage the Democrat says: "It would be a good thing for the city if the arrest and conviction of a few of our more willful hallowe'en celebrators could be made, as the past two years has thoroughly shown us that there are a certain few in our city who have no regard whatever for property or decency and to rid ourselves of such characters would certainly be a God send."

Demorest's Magazine.

We had never fully comprehended what was meant by a "family" magazine, until we had given the fine Christmas number of Demorest's Family Magazine a thorough examination. Of all others, this Magazine is certainly best entitled to use the word "family" in its title, for every member is considered in its make-up. Its beautifully illustrated articles are equal to any in the highest literary magazines. Especially noticeable in the December number is one about "Uncle Sam's Money," giving a description of how our coin is made, the illustrations starting with a view of the Mint, and giving through every process until the coin is put in circulation. The "Christmas Morning" takes up among the worthy poor, and shows us what can be done for their little ones. Every father and mother will appreciate this comprehensively and finely illustrated article. The other illustrated articles and stories are too numerous to mention, as can be appreciated when we say that the December number contains over two hundred illustrations, and every member of the family is thought of. But though our space is limited, we must mention the beautiful oil picture, "Christmas Morning," which is indeed worthy of a frame. We would advise everybody to send for this Family Magazine before making their choice for next year. They claim a dozen magazines combined in one, for only $2.00 per year, and certainly the claim is a just one. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York.

Boyne City.

Nov. 11.—Fine weather last week.

Wm. J. Pierson, one of the village council, having removed from the village, P. F. McIntire was elected to fill the vacancy at the last council meeting.

N. J. DeBarr has traded his lot on Lake street for W. J. Pierson's interest in the Dr. Sanderson property on same street, and is fitting up the house for his future home.

The Boyne post office has been moved to J. L. Handy's drug store and we suppose J. L. will officiate hereafter for a time at least.

Rev. Hurd filled the pulpit of Rev. Redpath in the Presbyterian church Sunday evening.

Rev. W. R. Norton and wife will start on Tuesday morning for their old home, Bath, Ingham county, where they will remain at least during the winter.

Rev. J. Burdge spends Sunday and today in Clarion, where he assists in dedicating the new M. E. church of that place.

Criminal arrests have been the order of the day in Boyne lately. Feeling the loneliness of the Melosh family in East Jordan, Frank Anderson has gone to keep them company during such time as the court shall direct. The cause of his arrest was the alleged burning of the court house on Oct. 8th 1887.

Frank M. Chase, former editor of the Citizen, goes with his family to Ohio this week. He will be greatly missed by many friends.

What is the matter with democrats? They seem to be all right, and got there this fall in great shape.

Rev. W. R. Norton filled the pulpit of Rev. J. Burdge Sunday morning.

On Friday afternoon the ladies of the Boyne W. C. T. U. surprised Mrs. Norton, on which occasion Mrs. N. was informed that she for once was not mistress of ceremonies and was requested to allow herself to be entertained, which she graciously did. The tables were soon spread and groaning under a profusion of edibles which the ladies had previously prepared. Our wife reports a very enjoyable afternoon.

Albert Kenney and family formerly of Echo township, Antrim county, have moved to Boyne. They will for the winter live with the family of G. W. Jones, father of Mrs. Kinney.

On Saturday A. E. Martin photographed the ladies of the W. C. T. U., thirteen in number.

Wm. White is putting a new edger of the best make into his sawmill today, and a large boiler lies in the yard which is to be added to the two in the mill thus greatly increasing its power and capacity.

F. M. Abraham is spending a few days in town.
